Beach couple taken by Bard's plays

For some, stage plays are just a form of entertainment. But for Penny and Norrie Martin, the theater has been a way of life since they came to Virginia Beach in 1956 to "retire."

Penny said she has been acting since she was a child in England. Norrie said Penny wanted to be an actress, but her father wanted her to have a more secure career as a secretary.

Even so, Penny managed to attend the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art in London in 1939, but the academy had to be shut down during World War II.

Penny said she "fiddled around" for a while, then decided to further the war effort by joining the Women's Royal Naval Service. At that time, Norrie was an officer with the Royal Navy, and they ended up working on the same staff. They married in 1946.

During the war, Norrie said he was sent to the United States several times. He said they liked the Hampton Roads area so well they decided to retire here.

For seven years after they came to Virginia Beach, Norrie said Penny worked with the Norfolk

Civic Ballet, then opened her own dance school in Norfolk for young children. Last summer, she decided to "retire."

During the last five years, she has been dictation coach for the Shakespeare By-the-Sea Festival. Penny also directs the apprentice program for the festival.

This year, the festival will be presenting "Much Ado About Nothing" and "Two Gentlemen of Verona," starting August 15 in the Pavilion. Penny is dictation coach for both plays.

"Shakespeare never had any terrors for me," she said in a clear British accent.

Penny said it is interesting for her to note that much of Shakespeare's language is used every day in the United States, while those expressions have passed out of use in England.

City tries catching up with bonds

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

On August 25, City Council will vote on the bond referenda package it will present to voters on Nov. 4.

The proposed referenda, refined during a number of workshops over the past few weeks, include $83 million in schools, roads, a courts building and a community center.

A town meeting on the referenda will be held tonight at 7 o'clock. A public hearing also is scheduled for the Aug. 25 Council meeting when Council will consider the referenda ordinance on first reading. The second reading of the ordinance will take place at a special meeting Aug. 28.

The decision has to be made by the end of the month to get the question on the ballot in time for the general election.

Mayor Robert G. Jones requested the staff to prepare a list of capital improvement projects designating which will be built on a pay-as-you-go basis and which will be financed by bonds.

With a combination of referenda and pay-as-you-go financing, the city is attempting to catch up with school and road needs which will cost the taxpayers an eight-cent real estate tax increase. Two other referenda projects, the Juvenile Court Building and the Virginia Beach Community Center at Great Neck, will require another two-cent increase for an overall increase of ten cents.

The capital improvement plan favored by Council calls for an eight-year plan for schools and a ten-year plan for roads.

The proposed referenda call for $27 million for schools which would account for a three-cent tax increase; $40 million for roads; $6.5 million for the Juvenile Court Building and $9.5 million for the Community Center.

Pay-as-you-go road construction would require five cents of the tax increase, to finance the

Dark bowling lanes thing of past with Lynnhaven center

By Stephanie Beyer

There are only steel supports now, but in a few months, a brand-new $4.2 million bowling center will be open for business on Lishell Place across from Lynnhaven Mall.

Bill Hare, vice president of operations for the Lynnhaven Bowling Center, said the center is going to be ultra-modern. His goal is to change the common view of the "bowling alley"—a dark place where most people would not want to bring their families.

The new center will have carpeted walls, featuring a mural of the Virginia Beach city symbol, according to Hare. It will also have skylights and modern furnishings. "It's going to be pretty unique," he said.

In addition, the center will have an automatic scoring system, with capabilities for projecting television shows on individual overhead displays. Bowlers can also have their performance videotaped and played back on the overhead. Hare said the lane itself will be synthetic and be four times as flat as a traditional lane, something he said a serious bowler can appreciate.

A full-service restaurant, complete with a seafood and vegetable raw bar is also being planned for the center, according to Hare. There will be a snack bar for bowlers who want a quick meal and a glass-fronted lounge, he said.

For the children, there will be a playroom, with Mickey Mouse patterned into the wall carpeting, and a game room.

He said a bowling center hasn't been built in Lynnhaven since the 1960s. The investment group building the center saw a need for recreation in the area, according to Hare, and a market survey showed bowling was popular.

Hare said he hopes the new center will encourage people who have never bowled to try it. He also hopes bowlers who have become discouraged with the game will return to it after trying the Lynnhaven Center. As a result, he said those bowlers may try other lanes as well.

"It's going to be a family orientated - recreation business," he said. "We want to make it an atmosphere that you would not hesitate to bring the family to."

Although the center will not be open until October 1 of this year, Hare said 16 leagues have already signed up.

The center will also provide 26 new jobs, plus part-time jobs for local teenagers.

Antique porcelain hobby became 16-year business for Beach woman

What started out as a hobby turned into a business for Angela Walker, a native of England, and her husband.

Almost a decade ago, Walker said she began collecting 18th century English porcelain. As time went on, she began refining and selling pieces of her collection. Sixteen years ago, she decided to start a business—Antiques by Angela of London—in Virginia Beach.

She said when her husband, a Navy captain, retired, he earned a fine arts degree and added a collection of antique prints to the porcelain. Most of them are 18th century wood or steel engravings of American scenery and of birds.

"It's a wonderful way to decorate a house if you can't afford fine paintings," Walker said.

The Walkers' collection of blue and white porcelain, antique silver and prints was on display at the Munderly Antiques Show and Sale at the Pavilion recently. Walker said the show is one of 16 shows she is attending this year.

Business for the porcelain is booming, according to Walker. She said every year shows an increase, even though she no longer has an open shop. It has become fashionable to collect antique porcelain, especially English porcelain that is in good condition.

"They do nothing but go up in value," she said.

Most of her clients for the porcelain are older, but she said she does have some young people who collect figurines. Walker also buys many young people buying pairs, which usually cost around $35.

Walker said she is cutting down on the number of shows she is attending, although she said she still attends two shows in Virginia Beach and several major shows on the East Coast.

Plans for Neptune Festival in the works

Initial planning meetings are being held at the Oceana Naval Air Station this week for the Neptune Festival/NAS Oceana Air Shows to be held at the Naval Air Station on Saturday, Sept. 20 and Sunday, Sept. 21.

As in the past, the air shows will feature the Blue Angels flight demonstration squadron. Details of other participants in the two-day event are being worked out.

The air shows have been a tradition with Oceana and Virginia Beach for more than two decades.

Captain John E. Allen, the commanding officer of the base, said the air shows on Saturday and Sunday are one of the biggest and most effective ways the people of the Oceana Navy community and Virginia Beach can cooperate together on a worthwhile, enjoyable endeavor.

Teacher evaluation in force by 1988

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

This is the second in a series of articles on the Virginia Beach Education Association.

Part of the working philosophy of the Virginia Beach Education Association is a desire for teacher excellence. A school system committee, with representatives from VBEA as members, recently recommended a plan for a teacher evaluation system to the school board. The school board approved the plan.

Rob Jones, president of VBEA, said the program was tested out on a group of principals and teachers last year. He said the principals first had to go through a training session, conducted by M. D. Wyne of the University of North Carolina, where they would evaluate the performance of a teacher on video tape.

Teachers were informed of what to expect from the evaluation, Jones said. The principal would then do an evaluation of the teacher at three different times. He said the evaluation stressed classroom management, especially whether the teacher seemed prepared and whether the objectives of the course were presented clearly.

Jones said the system does not "judge the content of what is being taught, it judges how it is being presented."

He said this school year, all school system principals will receive training in the teacher evaluation system. Next year, the system will be used to evaluate new teachers, and by 1988, it will be used for all teachers. He said after the first year the system is used on all teachers, "that would be the time when we would decide if it is useful or not."

This evaluation procedure has an advantage over the previous procedure, according to Jones, because teacher input was used to create the evaluation system.

"It's a fine example of teachers being allowed to put in meaningful input," he said. "I hope that this kind of meaningful setting will be a model for future investigation, not only in evaluation, but in any major decision the school system has to make in terms of employee input."

Another advantage, according to Jones, is that the evaluation system will not be used to determine merit pay for teachers. He said using such an evaluation that way could destroy teacher morale.

Still another advantage is that the new system will give teachers a conference with the principals before and after an evaluation, Jones said.

The old law is a better law

Virginia Beach residents involved in traffic accidents no longer have to file a report with the Virginia Department of Motor Vehicles since a new law took effect recently. In addition, insurance companies no longer have to report cancelled policies.

Instead, the department is sending letters out at random, requesting the name of a motorist's insurance company and policy number.

If the letter is not answered, or the driver does not have insurance, his driver's license will be suspended. In addition, the driver will have to pay a $300 fine, plus a $30 fee to get the license reinstated.

The new sampling process is designed to identify uninsured motorists, the same thing the old law was designed to do.

The old law was inconvenient in some ways, but it seems like a better alternative for checking up on uninsured drivers than a random sample.

DMV estimates state that about 6.5 percent of Virginia drivers do not have insurance at some point during the year. A random sample can't possibly monitor as many uninsured drivers as insurance companies reporting to the department as soon as a policy is cancelled, so more uninsured drivers will probably go undetected.

There are also more paperwork and personnel requirements involved in the sampling system. Forms must be mailed out, processed when the forms are returned and insurance companies must be contacted to verify the information. People who don't return the forms must be tracked down.

The result is more hours spent on paperwork and the need for more staff. Those costs are passed on through vehicle registration fees and license plate fees. Since the beginning of the month, those fees have been increased slightly—$1 in registration fees, with a dollar decrease in the inspection fees, and $3 more for replacing license plates—and it is probable the costs will go up.

Although the old law was inconvenient in some ways, it seems like a better alternative for checking up on uninsured drivers than a random sample. —S.M.B.

Bond referendum should be approved

A plan to ease the backlog of schools and roads is being considered by the Virginia Beach City Council. If approved, voters will have several bond referendums on the ballot in November.

About $360 million is needed for roads. Under the plan, offered by City Manager Thomas Muehlenbeck, voters would only be concerned with approximately $70 million, the rest being picked up through charter bonds and general revenue funds. A referendum for around $40 million will be held in November, with another referendum for $30 million to be held in 1991.

A November school bond referendum will be asking voters for about $27 million. In 1989, another $35 million will be put up for a vote and in 1992, voters will be asked to approve a $24 million bond referendum.

The cost to residents for the bond referendum plan will be an increase of 14 cents per $100 of assessed value on real estate taxes over several years.

Other projects—like the proposals for a juvenile court, and a recreation center in Great Neck on the November referendum—will be put to voters for approval.

The cost to residents will be an increase of 14 cents per $100 of assessed value on real estate taxes over a period of several years. Mayor Robert Jones says even with the increase, Virginia Beach will still have the lowest tax rate in the state.

The city council should follow through on its initial acceptance of the plan and formally approve it.

Even though voters failed to approve four referendums for roads and schools last year, voters should consider passing the referendums through this November. The plan is one for gradual spending, with voters still having the freedom not to approve later bonds if they wish. —S.M.B.

Sun's pageant coverage praised

Editor:

The Virginia Beach Sun's coverage of the activities of the most valuable asset that our city has, its youth, is tremendous! Psychologists and educators tell us that it is essential to foster a positive self-image in our young people if they are to grow into responsible, resourceful, contributing members of society.

By reporting regularly on the various activities of the young people of the community, The Sun is helping them to understand that they are very important members of our community.

I was especially impressed by the coverage of the pageants by the Sun held in our city recently. My daughter has competed in several pageants and, although she has never placed first, she has always been a winner.

She has learned to look at people when she talks to them, to carry herself with poise, to perform in front of an audience, and to demonstrate that she is proud of who and what she is. She has learned to congratulate the winners and to be happy for them. She has learned how to handle herself when her best may not be the best and to keep trying.

These are skills which are also taught at our Old Donation Center for the Gifted and Talented. I believe that my ten-year-old daughter has learned skills which will carry her through junior high, senior high, and adulthood. She is a better, more self-confident person for having had this opportunity. If pageants are used as an opportunity for learning, they can be very positive.

Thank you showing this side.

Thank you also to the members of the business community who sponsor the young girls in these pageants so that they have the opportunity.

Runaways society's problem

Editor:

They come in all sizes and shapes. Some are fat, others skinny; some tall, others short. They are black, white, brown and yellow. They age from eight to eighteen. They are America's "black eye."

They live on the streets of cities and towns throughout the U.S., and are dying proof that we are a disposable society with little interest in its throwaways, discards or leftover garbage. The Center for Child Abuse and Neglect says that over 1 million street kids are maladjusted, psychologically sick and very lonely. They are unwanted, unloved, rejected, uncared for, abused and very vulnerable.

Mainstream America sits in its comfort and luxury and vicariously observes the runaway problem via TV and newspapers. There is a sense of helplessness. Nobody knows how to alleviate the runaway situation. No one is willing to sacrifice the time necessary to set up half-way houses, even in their local communities. The church is asleep and federal funds have been cut.

Although the business community gives over 25 million toward the problem through organizations like the Covenant House, it just touches the tip of the iceberg. Grassroots citizenry refuses to get involved. Excuses vary from, "I'm too busy" to "Welfare will take care of them" or "the Church is doing a good job."

Finally, we foreclose on our conscience by saying, "Am I my brother's (children's) keeper?" The answer to that question is, yes.

There are over 1.3 million American children, under 18, on the streets of the United States. One out of every three kids is a throwaway. It other words, they have been forced from their homes or they are fleeing impossible home conditions.

Sociologists report that child molestation and incest are dominant causes of runaways. If drugs and alcohol don't consume them, chances are they will catch syphilis, gonorrhea or AIDS.

Prostitution is the rule for street kids, not the exception. Necessity dictates, society watches, cities apologize, police are overwhelmed and consequently, the problem grows daily.

Temporary shelters or safe houses are needed everywhere.

Operations like the Covenant House in New York have done an excellent job of providing sanctuary in the "Big Apple" and other large cities, but there are over 700,000 "working" children on the street and barely 500 safe houses in all America. In other words, there is only one safe house per 14,000 kids.

The most obvious solution to the problem is the church, which is commissioned to share the gospel of Jesus Christ. "For I was an hungry, and ye gave me meat: I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink: I was a stranger, and ye took me in: Naked, and ye clothed me: I was sick and ye visited me: I was in prison and ye came unto me... Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least (runaways) of these by brethren, ye have done it unto me."

There are over a half a million churches in America and if each church would adopt even one runaway child per congregation, streets would be cleaned up and the healing process begun. We are our brother's (runaway's) keeper and we can't ignore this blight on our country.

Commission on Excellence reflects goals of Virginia Beach Education Association

LET'S TALK

By Rob Jones, president,
Virginia Beach Education Association

Over the past four months, the VBEA has been carefully monitoring the work and committee recommendations of Governor Baliles' Commission on Excellence in Education.

The Commission members include two legislators, Senator Hunter B. Andrews and Delegate Dorothy S. McDiarmid, the Virginia State Board of Education Members, and the Education Sub-committee of Governor Robb's Commission on Virginia's Future. The outcome of the Commission's deliberations will be very important, as Governor Baliles will most likely use all or parts of the report as his 1987 legislative package for education.

In his remarks to the Commission on March 26, 1986, Governor Baliles charged the members to achieve what the Future Commission set forth as a goal in 1984:

"Education should be the highest priority of this Commonwealth. As it nears the year 2000, Virginia should aspire to a statewide educational system that is among the nation's very best. Virginia should rank among the top ten states in the quality of education it offers."

The governor reminded the members that Virginians are engaged "in global competition—educationally, economically and ideologically...we must compare and challenge ourselves by world standards."

He told the group that in a recent poll, "97 percent of the Virginians surveyed indicated that working to develop the best educational system in the world will be the most important determinant of America's future strength." In addition, he indicated that the public would be receptive to the ideas and recommendations, and would be willing to pay more money for education as long as they can be reasonably assured that educational quality will result.

The Governor urged the Commission to "Be bold! Be creative! Balance tougher rules and incentives with local enthusiasm and support and...give guidance on how to measure Virginia's standing and progress in education."

On June 23, the first draft of the recommendations of the committee was released. The Commission had focused on four major areas and members had been assigned to four committees: The Committee on Teachers and Teaching, The Committee on Structure and Organization, The Funding and Equal Access Committee, and the Committee on Student Preparation and Achievement. The recommendations represented the ideas of the members of the individual committees. They had been meeting over the past two months with statewide organizations, PTA's, local school boards, teachers and members of the public.

During the next two months, the Commission will examine the recommendations and determine if they meet the directives of the Governor and can be achieved in terms of fiscal reality and feasibility.

Among the recommendations the commission is addressing include the need to prepare an "academically challenging education for prospective teachers and increased teacher professionalism." Their recommendations include "increased salaries competitive with those of the top 10 states, increased role of teachers in planning and decision-making regarding instructional program and instructional management, structure of school day to provide for teacher consultation, planning and increased use of paraprofessionals and technology."

The Commission also emphasized development of a plan for greater cooperation between business, industry and public schools. They proposed the maintenance of the present length of the school day and year.

Another recommendation was that the pupil-teacher ratio be based on the number of students per teacher exclusive of all other personnel, and that class size be reduced, especially in first grade and high school English classes.

Many of the recommendations have been goals of the VBEA for years. We are hopeful that the final draft to the Governor will lead to the improvement of the quality of instruction for all students and recognize that excellence in education depends on a prepared, respected, duly compensated teacher corps.

Moreover, it is our hope that once these recommendations have been finalized that the taxpayers will be willing to show their support for the best educational system in the nation.

Economic outlook changeable

Wall Street—The week ahead

By George T. Staggs

Welcome to Wall Street, via The Virginia Beach Sun. In this weekly article, I will present a brief overview of what is happening on Wall Street, plus important events scheduled on the calendar that will have effects on the market in "The Week Ahead."

While it is my hope that you find this article informative and interesting, I am reminded of a quote credited to Voltaire, "The man who ventures to write contemporary history must expect to be attacked both for everything he has said and everything he has not said."

I welcome your comments.

Overtones of recession

The major problem in the most recent weeks and for the immediate future is the vacillating economic outlook, with overtones of recession. Wall Street continues to look to Washington and the Federal Reserve Board for solace. However, having cut the discount rate just a few weeks ago, the Fed appears not prepared to move precipitously at this time.

The market will continue to deal with the "Summer Doldrums" again this week, following the dribbly pattern developed in the latter part of July. The Dow Industrial Average reached its all-time high on July 2 and spent the rest of the month retreating to close the month down about 130 points from the top.

The Bond Market crowd watches the huge $28 billion Treasury refunding taking place this week, recalling the recent May auction which resulted in a good deal of "red ink" in the dealer community.

This auction, which is comprised of $13 billion in new money, the remainder a swap of maturing issues, will be watched with a certain amount of concern.

July sales figures

Also of importance this week is the release of July sales figures for the major department store chains. We expect the trend of restrained consumer spending that we have seen for the last several months to be continuing through the July reporting period.

We also forecast that the July automobile sales reported this week will reflect a decline in July to a 7.3 million unit pace. This is down 900 thousand units from the seasonally adjusted pace of 8.2 million units reported for May and June.

We will be looking with great anticipation this week for the release by the administration of its mid-session budget projections. The economic assumptions being made for 1987 will be crucial.

The administration has been projecting a 4.5% rise in the Gross National Product for 1987. Private economists disagree. They say that these projections are far too ambitious.

Dog Days

For some reason, the ancient Romans believed that Sirius, the dog star, was responsible for the hottest and muggiest kind of summer weather.

Good reason, then, why August weather is called dog days.

Martins devoted to Beach stage

technical problems for a group of non-professional actors, according to Penny. She said it can be hard, going out on a big stage like the one in the Pavilion, and being able to speak the lines so they can be heard clearly.

Norrie has also been very involved in local theater. He credits his wife with getting him on stage. "I never would have even started if not for her," he said.

Norrie was very active in the Little Theater of Virginia Beach. He has played Sir Toby Belch from Shakespeare's "Twelfth Night," God in "Heaven Can Wait," and for 10 weeks, he did a summer tour as Col. Pickering in "My Fair Lady."

Penny also did some acting and directed several plays with the Little Theater. Norrie said he has also done many commercials, the latest one for a computer firm in Alabama. But he said now that he is older, there are fewer roles for him to play.

"I decided to sit back for a while," he said. "So here I am, sitting back."

His biggest role right now is driving his wife to and from rehearsals and being supportive of her. "I'm very fortunate to have a wife like that, and I do everything I can to help her," he said.

Recently, a malignant lump was discovered in Penny's breast. She had surgery, and was back at rehearsal in a week. "She has the courage and guts to keep going and now she's back on the job like nothing has happened," Norrie said, admiringly.

"Penny's done all the work. She is dedicated to the stage," Norrie added. "I've had all the good parts. She hasn't had much chance to be on stage."

But Penny doesn't seem to mind. She speaks enthusiastically about the apprentice program, and seems to regret the time she had to spend in the hospital for her operation. "I've done it for fun, for love," she said.

The works on view are stylistic renderings of Tidewater landscapes and seascapes. These prints are bright color and design-oriented compositions, patterns and textures. The imagery is soft and subdued, employing pastel blues, greens, reds and yellows.

Kirby has worked in local galleries for seven years and is currently a framer at Ocean Art Gallery at the oceanfront.

Beach Navy instructor cartoonist by night

By Mille Tamberg
Special to the Sun

James Guthrie of Virginia Beach is a Navy instructor by day and a cartoonist by night.

The 41-year-old chief petty officer is assigned to Light Helicopter Anti-Submarine Squadron 30 based at the Naval Air Station in Norfolk.

The squadron's mission is to teach pilots and aircrew members how to fly the SH-2F Seasprite helicopter and to provide aerial support to the oceanographic survey ship USNS Harkness. Guthrie's job is to familiarize enlisted men with the specifics of the Seasprite.

"I teach students cargo handling and rescue duties," he said. "Once they're through those phases, they go on to the tactical phase of anti-submarine warfare training. That's where they learn to operate the helicopter's electronic equipment."

Guthrie has been an instructor for two years. He said he gets the most satisfaction from interaction with the students and seeing them through the course.

"They'll spend a lot of time transferring people or supplies and doing radar surveillance, but they'll have to be ready at just a moment's notice to go and search for submarines," Guthrie said.

The 16-year veteran says he enjoys the job at the squadron and is happy with his decision to come back into the Navy after an eight year break.

Guthrie did his first hitch from 1963 to 1967 as an aerographer's mate, a weather guesser. He said he re-enlisted in 1975 after working and attending college because the Navy gave him a sense of direction.

"The Navy had undergone a big pay raise just before I came back. That was attractive. Plus, just the idea of retirement sounded good to me," he said.

Guthrie now has three years of college behind him, a well-established career, and a hobby. He draws and writes his own comic strips, which are frequently published in the Norfolk Naval Base newspaper.

"I've never taken any drawing courses," Guthrie proudly said. "I've always been an artist of sorts. "About a year ago, I decided to draw this strip, 'Haze Gray.' It's about an unidentified type of frog floating thing and the main character is a division chief. It's just day-to-day Navy stuff."

After "Haze Gray," came "Thundering Paws and his pony, Hooves. Guthrie's newest cartoon strip is "Over the Brink."

"I just make them up. They're about everyday things," he says. "I haven't received any money for them, but I hope to."

Right now his three cartoon strips are just a hobby, but Guthrie is hoping they'll make him famous someday.

Groups join to fight sexual abuse of children

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

Three years ago, Pat Ingimire founded the Virginia Beach chapter of Society's League Against Molestation (SLAM), a volunteer group dedicated to preventing and educating people about child sexual abuse.

But in August, Ingimire is dropping the national charter with SLAM and joining with RESPONSE, a sexual assault support service based in Norfolk.

Ingimire said the main reason for the change is because she feels the two groups can accomplish more working together. "RESPONSE is wanting the same thing we're wanting, so why not work together?" she said.

"RESPONSE is wanting the same thing we're wanting, so why not work together?" Pat Ingimire, founder, Society's League Against Molestation.

There was also a high turnover of volunteers in the group, according to Ingimire. She said they had about 15 active volunteers, but many of them would only be active for a few months or a year. Ingimire, who is a professional hairdresser, said it was becoming difficult for her to find time to keep the chapter going. She discovered that RESPONSE could take over many administrative duties.

RESPONSE has been in existence for over 10 years, according to Ingimire, and was previously known as Tidewater Rape Information Services.

Before joining RESPONSE, the group concentrated on sexual abuse prevention, particularly with laws involving child sexual abuse cases. Ingimire said last year SLAM was working to pass a bill through the Virginia legislature allowing hearsay evidence to be used in cases involving children. Normally, someone like a social worker or a counselor could not testify about what the child told them, but Ingimire said that kind of testimony should be allowed. She said it helps put a child at ease, knowing that he or she doesn't have to testify alone. The bill did not pass, but will come up for consideration again.

SLAM also furthered prevention by sponsoring puppet shows in local schools.

The group provided a way for people to deal with the effects of child abuse. Ingimire said many of the volunteers joined because a family member was abused or a friend had a child who was abused. She founded the group because she saw what sexual abuse did to the family of a friend.

"It's a very helpless feeling when something like this happens," she said, and working as a volunteer is one way to do something positive.

Under RESPONSE, the group will become an advisory committee, dealing with public awareness, fundraising and legislation. In addition, RESPONSE provides a 24-hour crisis line, counseling and a volunteer service, which meets with sexual assault victims immediately after an assault and escorts them through a trial.

RESPONSE is partially funded by the United Way. Ingimire said SLAM was totally dependent on voluntary contributions. After the two groups merge, they will be holding a "Cut-a-thon" fundraiser on Monday, August 25 in Pembroke Mall. Ingimire said volunteer hairdressers will be cutting hair for a $10 donation from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m.

Summertime safety for barbecues offered

Fire Safety

Master Fire Fighter

Barbecue grills can be found in just about every Virginia Beach backyard, and someone is going to take a few careless shortcuts when it comes to lighting a fire in the grill. Here are a few fire safety tips for you to consider.

• Getting a good hot fire started is really simple if you take your time at it. First, you must arrange the charcoal briquets into a pyramid-shaped mound. Soak the coals with approved barbecue lighting fluid only. Do not use gasoline. Gasoline is too explosive to be used, and besides your food will taste like you are eating a carburetor.

Some people have used gasoline, and when we pull up on our fire truck we usually have to treat the homeowner for second degree burns, as well as put out the fire on his deck and back of his house.

• Let the lighting fluid soak into the coals for five minutes. Light the coals and stand back for the fire will slowly increase. Once the fire is lit do not attempt to make it flame again by squirting fluid on the hot coals. This is a dangerous practice and second degree burns really do hurt.

• Allow yourself twenty-five to thirty minutes before smothering out the hot grey coals. I usually precook my chicken by boiling it during this time.

• After you have finished with the hot coals, slowly pour water into the ashes. Do not dump the ashes near a wooden fence or where a child can walk into them.

Barbecue can be fun, but it first has to be safe. If you live in an apartment, keep an eye on the flames so they don't start a fire on the balcony above. Watch for hot coals falling to the deck below.

To report a fire in Virginia Beach, dial 911.

Crime Solvers seek hit and run driver

Since July, 1985, there have been 1,095 hit and run accidents reported to the Virginia Beach Police Department involving property damage and personal injury.

Crime Solvers is looking for the driver who, on Saturday, July 5 at 2:20 a.m., struck a pedestrian in the 1400 block of Pacific Ave.

A 27-year-old man who was visiting Virginia Beach was struck by two vehicles while attempting to cross the street. The driver of the first vehicle, driving a blue, 1981, Z-28 camaro, traveling southbound on Pacific Avenue, inadvertently sideswiped the victim, knocking him to the pavement.

the injured man, a second vehicle drove over him, dragging his body approximately 25 feet and left the scene, heading southbound.

An investigation revealed the injuries sustained by the second vehicle resulted in his death. The police have no description of the vehicle or its driver, who is wanted for questioning at this time.

Crime Solvers asks that anyone with information about this or any other hit and run call 427-0000.

If an arrest is made, the caller will be eligible for up to a $1,000 cash reward. Rewards are also paid for information about the location of stolen property, wanted persons or any other crime committed in Virginia Beach. Callers are never asked to reveal their name.

Gerry appointed pastor

Ken Gerry of Virginia Beach has been appointed as Pastor of the Open Door Chapel of Ocean View in Norfolk.

Ordination services for Gerry will be held Sunday, August 17 at 2 p.m.

Superswim classic brings out local swimmers for leukemia

The First Annual Superswim Classic in Virginia Beach, to benefit the Leukemia Society of America, recently raised approximately $7,500.

The Virginia Beach Swim League and several private and public pools in the area participated in the Superswim. A victory party was held recently at Larkspur Swim & Racquet Club featuring Olympic medalist, Sweet Pea Whitaker.

Steven Day, Jr. of Green Run Swim Team, and Nicole Dubick of Chimney Hill Swim Team were the youth grand prize winners.

Steven Burgess of Decker, Decker, Cardon, Thomas, Weintraub and Hitchings was the adult grand prize winner and donated his trip to California back to the Leukemia Society to be used to raise additional funds.

Mental health volunteers needed

The Virginia Beach Comprehensive Mental Health Services currently has openings for a number of volunteers.

Volunteers who can fill one morning, afternoon or evening shift each week are needed to answer phones in the agency's Crisis Intervention Service at the Pembroke office. Volunteers will respond to business and information calls and requests for service.

Clerical volunteers are needed at both the Pembroke and Hilltop locations. Duties, which may include phone answering, record keeping, copying, filing, or typing, will vary depending on the agency's needs and the volunteer's qualifications.

Van drivers are needed to operate an agency vehicle on weekdays. Volunteers for this position should have a good driving record and be able to complete the city's eight-hour defensive driving course.

Training is provided for all positions. Call Jo-Ann Clegg at 490-0583.

Free eye care available for elderly Beach residents

The Virginia Eye Care Project, a statewide program for the disadvantaged elderly, is bringing medical eye care at no out-of-pocket cost to hundreds of older Americans, including Virginia Beach residents who otherwise might have had to go without it.

Program officials said 31 percent of patients seen so far had never had an eye exam until they called the toll-free Helpline at 1-800-222-EYES (3937) for a referral to one of the program's volunteer eye physicians.

Through the toll-free number, operating weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. in Virginia Beach, residents age 65 and over can obtain medical eye care and information. Callers who have medical eye problems, but who don't have an ophthalmologist or haven't seen one in the past three years, are eligible for eye care at no cost.

"We know we're reaching our target population when nearly a third of these patients have never had an eye examination," David W. MacMillan, president of the Virginia Society of Ophthalmology, said.

The program is designed to reach older Virginia Beach residents who are vulnerable to blinding eye disease due to lack of finances, medical insurance, or information about eye disease, MacMillan said.

Three to five percent are not covered by Medicare, and many cannot afford deductibles and co-payments or are afraid of surgical expenses.

Patients without Medicare or other insurance will receive care at no charge. For those who have coverage, participating ophthalmologists will accept insurance as payment in full for their services.

Since the Helpline opened, 1,299 Virginia residents have called for eye care or information. Of the callers, 800-108 of whom have no insurance have been referred to local ophthal-mologists for examination and treatment. Of these, 52.3 percent are being treated for cataracts, 11.7 percent for macular degeneration, 4.4 percent for glaucoma, and 2 percent for diabetic retinopathy.

"This is not just a one-time service," MacMillan said. "These ophthalmologists have agreed to see patients who need sustained medical care for as long as necessary to treat the conditions diagnosed in the initial exam."

If hospital care is required, ophthalmologists work with local hospitals to make care available. Hospital charges, eye glasses and prescription drugs are not paid for through the program.

Patients who are eligible for Medicare but not enrolled will be mailed information on how to get coverage. Those who call the Helpline but are ineligible for treatment will be mailed a brochure describing eye diseases of the elderly and their warning signs.

Child ID's make emergency medical treatment easier

Most doctors will not treat seriously injured children without the consent of a parent or legal guardian. The longer it takes to find that individual, the longer treatment is delayed—sometimes resulting in serious consequences.

A California man has devoted the last three years of his life trying to change that situation by getting parents to equip their children with a Lifesaver tag that will both identify them and allow doctors to act immediately in an emergency.

Designed by George Wager of Buena Park, Calif., the tag is a piece of durable, non-erasable, waterproof material that can be sewn into a child's clothing or attached to shoelaces. It is no bigger than the washing-instructions tag found inside most garments, yet it has space for important information, including a parent's signature authorizing doctors to "do whatever is deemed necessary to insure the safety of the child."

Wager relies on a network of volunteers—community groups, supermarkets, corporations, law enforcement agencies and others—to help distribute the tags. Some 30 million Lifesaver tags have been given away.

Wager said he thought up the idea for the tags several years ago, after he had read a newspaper story about a local boy who was hit by a car. Because the boy carried no identification, the police had difficulty locating his parents. Six hours after the accident, his mother was found; 20 hours later, the boy died of massive head injuries.

Wager realized at the time that his children carried no identification either, but his dog wore tags displaying its name, address, owner and phone number.

"That's stupid," Wager said. "My kids go off in all directions—anything could happen to them—and my dog has more identification than they do."

He subsequently founded Lifesaver Charities, a nonprofit organization.

Houston questions CBN bond

By Lee Cahill

City Council Reporter

Sam Houston, inveterate spokesman for the elderly and handicapped, has nothing against housing for youth, he said, but what about the elderly? "The elderly have been left behind."

In question were $5 million in Industrial Development Revenue bonds for CBN University for student housing.

Houston said he had asked two former chairmen of the Industrial Development Authority about housing for the elderly to no avail. He said he had nothing against the CBN application, because it was for youth, but "you've got to accept responsibility."

Councilman Robert Fentress responded by asking Hector Rivera, assistant to the city manager for human resources, to find out whether funds are available for housing for the elderly.

Council approved the issuance of the bonds by a vote of 8-2 with Councilwoman Nancy Parker and Councilman John Perry dissenting.

George Consolvo, attorney for CBN, explained that the Industrial Development bonds were requested rather than housing bonds under a special statute, which makes the tax-free bonds available to non-profit private organizations such as CBN and Virginia Wesleyan and the University of Richmond.

Parker asked whether Virginia Wesleyan and the University of Richmond got ITB's when they expanded.

Consolvo did not answer that question but said that the pool, amounting to $25 per capita, was created for non-profit private medical facilities and homes for the elderly as well as educational institutions.

Vice Mayor Meyera Oberdorf noted that IRB's were intended to create employment, and asked why CBN did not apply for housing bonds.

Consolvo said that CBN would not qualify for a housing bond but does qualify for the IRB under the special statute. He said that for-profit corporations applying for IRB's would not be penalized because of the issuance of the bonds to CBN because the bonds came from a separate fund.

Fentress amplified Consolvo's remarks saying that the city's allocation of $21 million already has been assigned and that any other requests for bonds would have to come out of the state surplus.

Block grant devoted to housing

By Lee Cahill

City Council Reporter

The twelfth year Community Development Block Grant program allocates a greater proportion of its resources to housing than in the past.

The change in emphasis is attributed by city staff to the 27.6 percent reduction in the 12th year program over the 11th year program.

The city's entitlement for the year is $1,785 million compared to $2,466 million in the 1985-86 program year. The cut, amounting to $681,000 resulted from a presidential deferral of $500 million in Community Development funding for 1986-87 and additional Gramm-Rudman cuts in the program.

Because of the cuts and increased contribution of city funds for capital projects and department administration, a greater percentage of the allocation is being used for housing—46.7 percent compared to 27.8 percent last year. In 1985-86, 53 percent of the budget was allocated to capital projects while this year capital projects are allocated only 33 percent.

Twelfth-year funding was appropriated by City Council Monday afternoon by a vote of 9-1 with Councilman John Perry dissenting.

Perry had requested a deferral to consider further requests from the communities of Burton Street, Graceton and Newsum Farm.

City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck said that the projects had been approved by the Citizens Advisory Committee which is made up of residents from the target areas, low income communities that qualify for the aid. He also said that the funds reflected in appropriation are all the funds available.

Projects include capital improvements such as water, sewer, streets and drainage for Graceton, Queen City, Reedtown and Seatack, housing programs which include code enforcement, demolition, clearance, homesharing, housing rehabilitation, last resort housing loans, replacement housing and other allocations for such activities as Black Heritage Awareness Cultural Activities, general management and oversight, Section 8 program administration and rental rehabilitation program administration.

Carpenter ants a nightmare for Beach homeowners

Most Virginia Beach homeowners and their families have beaches, pools, and vacations on their minds during July and August. It is during these summer months, however, that local homeowners should also be aware of carpenter ants.

"Carpenter ants have the potential to damage the wooden structure of a house, particularly during the hot and humid weather of July and August," said William Kolbe, training and technical services manager of a large pest control organization.

"Most people tend to think of ants simply as a nuisance, not as a threat to the structure of their houses," Kolbe said, "but carpenter ants hollow out wood to make their nests and often are found in the wood frame of a house. It behooves homeowners to check their houses for evidence of carpenter ants, and, if evidence is found, take the appropriate action."

Carpenter ants are a wood-destroying member of the ant family found in most areas of the United States. Like bees and termites, carpenter ants are social insects that establish nests and live in large colonies. They range in size from one-quarter inch to an inch-and-a-half and they vary in color—all black, or a combination of black and red.

"Carpenter ants generally are larger than most other species of ants," Kolbe said. "They are also quite daring and have been known to travel several hundred feet from their nests in search of food. They eat almost any household food, but particularly sugar and other sweets, and they can be found foraging almost anywhere in a house."

Once they enter a house, carpenter ants seek moisture and usually establish their nest in water-damaged wood, according to Kolbe. Nests can be near gutters or leaking doors and windows in the porch supports, siding, stairs, and near hollow doors or under bathtubs.

Unlike termites, carpenter ants do not eat wood—they simply hollow it out to form nests and establish colonies.

"In hollowing out a wood structure, carpenter ants weaken and damage the structure," Kolbe said. "In time, the affected wood may have to be repaired or replaced by the owner of the house or building."

Compounding the problem of carpenter ants, according to Kolbe, is the "remarkable survival capacity of these insects." For example, in a laboratory experiment, a beheaded black carpenter ant survived for 14 days and was still walking two days before it died.

"In other experiments carpenter ants survived complete submersion in cold water for 70 hours, and lived up to nine months without food," he said. "Clearly, these ants do not go away easily."

Signs of carpenter ants include wood shavings, soil and dead ants piled near a nest opening, ant activity and small openings to a nest.

"Many times the only indication of carpenter ants is the ants themselves," Kolbe said. "Nests are difficult to find, but finding them is the key to treating the infestation."

Mr. Kolbe says a pest control professional is best qualified to inspect a home infested with carpenter ants and determine the location of the colony and the proper treatment.

"A house owner should call as soon as he or she suspects carpenter ants are in the house," he said. "Left untreated, these ants are likely to multiply and thereby increase the potential for structural damage to the building."

City comes down on pumps

By Lee Cahill

City Council Reporter

City Council has strengthened its heat pump ordinance to cut down on the waste of groundwater.

The city had required that groundwater heat pumps return water to the water-bearing underground formation, or aquifer, from which it was withdrawn unless "otherwise provided by the State Water Control Board." The exception, concluded the Great Neck and Little Neck Groundwater Task Force, was being used to "sanction discharges where no return well was ever installed or to compensate for improperly constructed or maintained return wells."

The ordinance change eliminates the exceptions, and requires the return to the same aquifer unless the owner obtains a National Pollution Discharge Elimination System permit from the State Water Control Board.

Violation is a class 3 misdemeanor carrying a $500-a-day fine, with each day of the violation considered as a separate offense.

Council approved the change by a vote of 9-1 with Councilman John Perry dissenting. Perry had sought a deferral at the request of a constituent to allow for further study.

Councilman Albert Balko said that each pump uses 10,000 gallons of water a day and that he would like to see the loophole closed.

He said that the city needs to attack the existing water-to-heat pump users as well. Owners of existing pumps are not affected by the ordinance.

The city depends on neighbors to report violations.

"Nobody's going to report on neighbors," said Perry.

"Oh, yes they will," said Councilman John A. Baum.

It will be like a "neighborhood watch," said Tom Leahy, city engineer who served on the Task Force.

Ocean Lakes school site policy leaves council members guessing

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

There seems to be more to the Ocean Lakes school site situation than meets the eye, said Councilwoman Nancy Parker, but added that she was at a loss to fill in between the lines.

The remark followed a statement from Planning Director Robert Scott on the procedure followed in subdivision plat approval.

At issue was the PDH-2 (planned unit development) of R.G. Moore known as Ocean Lakes, and more specifically the two school sites which were to be dedicated by the developer.

The School Board just recently decided that the smaller site, a 25-acre elementary school site, was not suitable for their purposes and requested the city to purchase another site on new Dam Neck Road. Acquisition of the site is included in the proposed school referendum for $610,000. The other site, a high school site, contains 43 acres.

Among the plats is one showing the school site in question he said, which has been approved by Scott, but not by other city agencies.

No further development will be permitted on the property until the developer posts bond, Scott said.

Mayor Robert G. Jones asked Scott when the city should have the deed to the school property in hand.

Scott said that the staff has understood all along that the sites would be dedicated at the proper time. He said that since the rezoning for the property was approved on Nov. 14, 1983, approximately 62 percent of the project's plats have been approved.

Scott said usually the developer would be expected to post bond when 50 percent of the plats are developed.

Councilman Jon D. Moss said there was "too much ambiguity and discretion" in the policy and that the city needs a policy that is more concrete.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley said that Council learned only a few weeks ago that the site was not acceptable to the School Board. The site "seems to have been accepted and then not accepted," she said.

Scott said that Moore has proceeded with 176 of the multifamily units with 424 yet to be approved; 824 of the apartment units with 589 yet to be approved, and has proceeded with all 648 townhouses.

VBEA Sept. 24 workshop needs careful planning

By Stephanie Beyer

This is the third in a series of articles about the Virginia Beach Education Association.

It can take as much as 65 hours for the Virginia Beach Education Association staff to put together one of their special workshops for teachers, according to Uniserv Director James Chapman.

Typical workshops deal with topics such as classroom discipline, classroom management, curriculum development and teacher stress. Chapman said the VBEA tries to conduct at least six major workshops a year, including two on teacher instruction.

The workshops are not put together haphazardly, he said. The first thing that needs to be done is to determine a need for a workshop. For example, Chapman said the association is already working a workshop educating new teachers about what to expect from the Beginner Teacher Assistance Program (BTAP).

An afternoon meeting with new teachers in January showed that teachers knew very little about what to expect from the program, which requires teachers

Seventeen new blood donors give pints at hotel/motel association drive

Seventeen first-time blood donors dropped in recently at the Colonial Inn to contribute to the Virginia Beach Hotel/Motel Association's first Red Cross blood drive.

Red Cross head nurse Marilyn Asby said it was unusual for so many new donors to give blood at a drive.

"I'm very pleased with the response," Florence McDaniel, chairwoman of the association said.

"There are a lot of first-time givers. I think that's fantastic," Madeline Vakos, office manager at Colonial said.

A total of 64 people gave 59 pints to the Red Cross. The association's goal was to reach 200 pints. But McDaniel said the drive had "wonderful cooperation from members of the association, Ocean Rescue lifeguards and employees at the Virginia Beach Convention office.

The biggest number of donors came from The Colonial Inn, with 9 donors, according to McDaniel. Members of the Hotel/Motel Association were competing to see which business gave the most blood.

Sandra Tyndall, a first-time donor, said she was giving blood because the people she works with at the Colonial Inn would "never let me live it down."

Larry McInnis, a supervisor for Ocean Rescue, said the lifeguards were offered an incentive to come in and give blood. The director offered $5 to be donated to the United States Lifesaving Association for every guard that came in.

Another first-time donor, David Fox, a senior guard for Ocean Rescue, said he decided to give because he wanted to help raise money for the Lifesaving Association. He said he was also curious about what it would be like to give blood.

McInnis joked that was one way for the guards to get out of the sun for a while and be in an air-conditioned building.

One man said he came all the way from Los Angeles to give blood. Clip Kreps said he was vacationing in Virginia Beach when he saw an announcement for the drive in a newspaper.

"It's a sacrifice I can make that otherwise doesn't get made," he said. "It's something I have that I can give."

McDaniel said the drive also attracted a visitor from Ireland and a man who had donated blood in 17 states, with a goal of giving a pint in every state.

She said she has given many pints in the past, but she was reluctant to give at first, until she discovered her brother needed blood.

"I believe in it as a way to help others," she said. "It doesn't cost anything."

Virginia Beach Wins AAA Safety Award

Virginia Beach has earned the AAA's Award for Excellence for its achievement in the prevention of pedestrian fatalities and injuries and for its outstanding pedestrian safety program.

More than 2,619 cities and 23 states participated in the AAA survey. The city of Virginia Beach earned 810 points out of a possible 1,000 and was the leading city from 35 cities in the 200,000 to 500,000 population class. The city's death rate was .6, compared with the group pedestrian death rate of 3.3.

Virginia Beach's pedestrian injury rate was 29, compared with the group pedestrian injury rate of 85.

There were only pedestrians killed in 1985 in Virginia.

The pedestrian program focuses national attention on pedestrian safety needs by recognizing cities and states that have demonstrated successful programs for pedestrian safety.

The Award for Excellence is to be presented to the City Council at 2 p.m. on Monday, August 11 by Ivan D. Mapp and E.W. Timmons, Director of Public Affairs for the Tidewater Automobile Association.

Grading Scale Issue Should Be Resolved

The Virginia Beach School Board will be holding a special meeting to discuss the grading scale on August 14. A newly-formed parents group, as well as students, feel the current grading scale is too harsh. They would like to see a new grading scale.

The present scale is 95 and up for an A; 94 to 88 for a B; 87 to 81 for a C; and 80 to 75 for a D.

A new scale, proposed by the parents group, Parents of the '80s, would include pluses and lower the current scale.

The new scale would have 98 and up for an A plus; 97 to 93 for an A; 92 to 90 for a B plus; 89 to 85 for a B; 84 to 82 for a C plus; 81 to 76 for a C; 75 to 73 for a D plus; and 72 to 69 for a D.

Superintendent E.E. Brickell has said he opposes changing the scale. And having a tough grading scale would be in keeping with the Virginia Beach school system's goal of setting high standards for students and promoting educational excellence.

A new grading scale would have 98 and up for an A plus; 97 to 93 for an A; 92 to 90 for a B plus; 89 to 85 for a B; 84 to 82 for a C plus; 81 to 76 for a C; 75 to 73 for a D plus; and 72 to 69 for a D.

However, some students have said the scale has hurt their chances to get into colleges or find jobs. Parents have said students are not willing to work as hard under the current grading scale.

The proposed scale seems to have several advantages. It seems to be more flexible, giving more leeway between grades, giving students who strive for good grades a better incentive to work harder.

The scale could also benefit teachers at grading time. If a student is doing work slightly above a B but not quite at an A, the teacher could show that effort by giving the student a B plus. Under the present system, the teacher would only be allowed to give the student a B.

It is hoped that the school board will listen carefully to the requests of the parents and students and make some kind of modification in the grading scale.

Well Problems Need Solution

Some well owners in the Great Neck area of Virginia Beach are concerned that salt water is intruding into their wells.

Some residents have noticed a salty taste to their water, while others have noticed iron in the water or smelled a rotten egg odor.

It is one more episode in a long story of water problems for the Great Neck and Little Neck areas. The most recent problems actually began in 1985, when groundwater levels were below normal and several shallow wells dried up. A study by the city last year showed the problems would recur whenever there are drought conditions, similar to conditions this July.

The long-term solution is to connect private well users with the city water supply. But according to Thomas Leahy, the city's water resources engineer, that is something that cannot be done overnight. It could also take more time just to get approval from the city to go ahead with such a project.

Another solution was recently put into effect by the city council. The council strengthened the ground water heat pump ordinance so that the more powerful heat pumps will be required to return water to the groundwater supply, with very few exceptions.

A heat pump can use up to 10,000 gallons per day, according to the city's study, and as more and more residents convert to the heat pumps, shallow well owners are left dry.

If anyone violates the ordinance, it will cost them $500 per day. Neighbors will be asked to report any suspected violations.

The council has made a step in the right direction to help alleviate the water problems in Great Neck. But more needs to be done. The council should consider putting requests by Great Neck well owners to connect with the city water system on the agenda as soon as possible.

Without any permanent solution to the problem at Great Neck, it will continue, not only in dry periods but possibly throughout the whole year.—S.M.B.

Letters to the Editor

Multi-state lottery detrimental

Recently, there has been support for a multi-state lottery. Sixteen of the twenty-two lottery states, led by New York and New Jersey, have conceptually agreed to study the feasibility of a "Multi-state (grand prize sucker deal) Lottery," to be shared ratably by participating states.

John D. Quinn, director of the New York State Lottery, appears to be the prime mover in this multi-state lottery attempt. In my opinion, Mr. Quinn has overlooked the fact that Congress has closed the mails to the lotteries and that a multi-state lottery would involve the participation of the federal government, executive, legislative and judiciary and possibly a constitutional amendment. Any attempt to alter the U.S. Constitution is cumbersome and unwise, and for the lottery states to expect any Federal approvals without monetary remuneration is naive, especially in light of the deficit.

Until the birth of our "I want it now" generation, a lottery was perceived as a public nuisance. George Washington described gambling as the "child of avarice, the brother of iniquity and the father of mischief." Our forefathers thought that gambling represented the corrosion of individual moral values and promoted a something-for-nothing philosophy while undermining worthwhile principles. They were obviously correct, and if you doubt that, look at our present "I want it now" society.

Some claim that lotteries create new jobs; however, job creation by legalized gambling is illusory. Lotteries tend to funnel money away from the more productive segments of the economy, and therefore create jobs at the expense of other parts of the working community. Legalized gambling, even multi-state style, will not create new jobs, but rather shift around economic resources.

A lottery is a regressive tax, because it is not based on ability to pay. Therefore, the poor pay out more, as a percentage of their income, for the lottery than do the rich. Since the poor can least afford this inequity, inducing multi-state lottery participation, with even worst betting odds, seems abhorrent.

The lottery industry wants to expand lotteries beyond the various numbers games and ticket sales. The industry is in the process of creating video lotteries, similar to arcade games, and is exploring ways to pipe video lotteries into homes via cable television.

Some states that allow the lottery are being urged to set up video lottery machines in public places. The lottery industry even envisions being able to add the cost of bets and video games to your home cable bill.

Lastly, without exception, the states that presently have a lottery have increased crime, increased taxes (contrary to popular belief) and reduced services to its cities, towns and people. New Jersey, between the years of 1979 and 1985, had a 413 percent increase in major crime. 1979 was the year casinos were legalized in Atlantic City.

For twenty-two states to have legalized gambling for the purpose of pecuniary gain is bad enough; however, for the federal government to become involved with the establishment of a multi-state lottery shows a total lack of resolve and utter disregard for the welfare of our country and its questionable direction.

It's time we buckle up.

Senator supports drought relief

By Paul Tribble
U.S. Senate

I am pleased the Secretary of Agriculture has signed a drought disaster declaration for more than 50 Virginia counties.

This means farmers are eligible for emergency loans and can get feed for their livestock at reduced prices. Those needing help should contact their local Farmers Home Administration office.

The farm community has been hit hard in recent years and this drought is just the latest blow.

I have encouraged the Secretary to declare the remaining drought-stricken areas in Virginia eligible for aid as soon as possible.

Computer Crime

The Senate Judiciary Committee has unanimously passed my legislation imposing tough new penalties for computer crimes.

The committee's action moves us closer to stemming the use of high technology as a tool of crime. Computer crime is one of the worst white collar crimes facing our nation. It demands new and heavy criminal penalties.

My legislation would make it a crime to use a computer to steal, damage or destroy computerized data, or to access a federal without authorization. Wrongful trafficking in computer passwords would be prohibited. Finally, the bill makes it a crime to tamper with computerized medical records. The legislation applies to federal computers, computers belonging to federally insured financial institutions and to interstate computer transactions.

Widespread computer use has brought a great many benefits to American business and to all of our lives. But it has also created a new type of criminal, one who uses computers to steal, defraud and abuse the property of others.

It is time for Congress to give federal prosecutors tools that are necessary to respond to computer crimes.

Tips For "Latch Key Kids" Make Time Alone Safer

LET'S TALK

By Rob Jones, president,
Virginia Beach Education Association

As teachers, we care about the well-being of our students, even when they're not in our classrooms. We're particularly concerned about those who must leave for themselves for several hours before or after school while their parents are at work.

I hope this column will be useful to working with parents who, like it or not, must leave their children alone at home for part of each day.

If a child is mature enough to handle self-care and if parents take steps to make it work, the experience doesn't have to be detrimental. While one child left alone may feel depressed and fearful, another the same age may cope well — and even feel pride in the opportunity for added responsibility.

Psychologists say that there are fewer negative effects when parents have a strong, caring relationship with their children, and give them consistent direction and support. The most important thing is to continually reaffirm the feeling that someone cares and is "there" for your children, even when they're physically alone.

You can help make a self-care arrangement successful for you and your child if you:

- teach him or her basic "survival skills" to minimize physical hazards; set appropriate house rules to provide continuity and discipline children need;

- structure the time he or she is alone so those hours are productive;

- take time to share experience and feelings to strengthen the bond between you and your child.

Is Your Child Ready?

Virginia law isn't specific about the age a child may be left alone. A wise decision about self-care must be based on the age and maturity of the child, time of day, length of time involved, and other factors. If you're considering whether your child is ready, ask yourself these questions:

- Does my child get scared easily? Does he or she get upset or have trouble sleeping when I'm away?

- How mature is my child? Is he or she "old" or "young" for the age level? Does he or she recognize when to get help?

- Is my child often late to school? Does he or she usually get home on time?

- How good is my child at taking initiative, following through on tasks, completing homework and chores, carrying out directions?

- Is my child good at problem solving, thinking of alternative solutions when confronted with a new situation?

- What is my child's temperament? Is he or she very active perhaps more likely to get into trouble or very quiet perhaps more fearful?

- Can my child withstand peer pressure? Can he or she say "no"?

- Does my child feel comfortable coming to me or another adult with a problem, or does he or she want to handle everything alone?

Making Alone Less So

Most attention has focused on the physical safety of children who must spend hours alone at home each day. As teachers, we're also concerned about our students' emotional and intellectual growth. Here are some suggestions to help make a self-care experience positive for your child:

- Structure your child's time alone so that he or she has something interesting and meaningful to do: chores, homework, games, activities.

- Establish specific house rules. Make sure your child understands exactly what he or she may or may not do in your absence.

- Before you both leave home, talk over with your child what he or she will be doing later when home alone.

- Have your child call you as soon as he or she gets home.

- Check back later to let your child know you're thinking about him or her. Call to say "How are you? How's the model airplane?"

- Leave notes for your child to find. Remind him or her about the agreed-on activities for the day, what snack foods are available, or simply say, "Hello."

- When you get home, take time to talk to your child about what he or she did while you were away. Express interest without staging an inquisition.

- Discuss the self-care arrangements with your child. Talk about how he or she feels. Listen to fears or worries.

- Role-play with your child solutions to some of the more common problems that might crop up: missing the bus, losing the house key, parents not getting home on schedule.

- Arrange for a neighbor or relative to keep an eye on your child until you return home from work. Make sure your child knows how to contact that person.

- Take time for your child in the evenings and on weekends. Talk to each other. Participate in activities together.

Making The Time Count

If you structure the time, the hours your child spends alone at home can give him or her a sense of accomplishment, foster independence, build responsibility, and stimulate learning. Your child can make his or her time alone productive by:

- Keeping a journal of thoughts or feelings to share with you later.

- Fixing a nutritious snack.

- Listening to a book you've recorded on tape.

- Writing a letter to a relative.

- Designing a birthday card or other greeting card for a grandparent, neighbor, or friends.

- Taking care of household chores such as cleaning his or her room or sorting the laundry.

- Selecting several recipes to help you make later.

- Making out a schedule of what he or she wants to watch on TV for the next week, so you can discuss it together later.

- Doing homework.

- Drawing pictures or a cartoon strip explaining the action in a TV show he or she has watched or a book he or she has read.

- Following the directions for a "scavenger hunt" or "treasure hunt" you've videotaped or written down.

- Working independently on a project you started together.

- Visiting a friend one afternoon instead of going home with your permission.

- Making hand or finger puppets and creating a "show" to put on for you later.

Survival Skills Every Child Should Know

If your child spends time alone at home, make sure he or she knows basic first aid and how to call you, the neighbors, the police and the fire department. Post these emergency numbers by each phone. Here are some other safety rules your child should know:

- Keep your house key out of sight.

- Keep the door locked, and don't let anyone in the house unless you express permission of your parents for that person to be admitted.

- Don't reveal that you're alone at home. Tell phone callers "My mother is busy" rather than "She's not home."

- If anything looks suspicious when you get home, such as an open door or broken window, don't go into the house. Call police or your parents from a neighbor's house.

- In case of fire, leave the house immediately. Call the fire department from a neighbor's house.

- Don't go anywhere with anyone or leave your house or the yard without first getting permission from your parents.

Talk To The Teacher

We hope you'll talk to your child's teacher often during the year. When you do, ask about specific classroom-related activities that could make your child's time alone meaningful.

Working together, we can accomplish a lot more for your child.

Wall Street The Week Ahead

By George T. Stagg

It was General George Custer who said, "Hang tough, boys, while I think of something." That is about where the market stands at this juncture, biding its time waiting for some turn-on.

On Monday, August 4, the DOW Industrial Average made a strong stand at the 1735 area, after a near perfect 10 percent correction from the all-time high reached on July 2. Following an early "Blue Monday" setback, the market rallied, was up for three consecutive days, and finished the week at 1783, up nearly 48 points from the correction low reached on Monday.

The market now moves into the "Dog Days" of August looking somewhat more encouraging that the last month when we saw the DOW decline a frightening 130 points. Last week's bounce indicates that we may be stabilizing in a trading range for the remainder of August, with support in the 1730 area and upside potential to about 1825.

The Bond Market crowd was apparently satisfied with the results of last week's huge $30 billion Treasury refunding, as bond prices improved following the completion of the auction on Thursday.

Now that the fixed income investors don't have that auction to kick around anymore, and all fear and trembling dissipated, the question for the week ahead is whether the bond-market will continue to improve.

More economic indicators

This week contains some very interesting economic indicators, in addition to the Presidential news conference on Tuesday, worth watching. We expect we will hear some serious lobbying for the tax reform legislation.

Also on Tuesday, we received the results of the July retail sales. July new car sales, which were down in line with our forecast of last week, suggest that retail sales will follow suit. We project a decline of about one percent.

Later this week, we will receive the July Producer Price Index (PPI) and the July Industrial Production numbers. Declining gas and oil prices should affect the PPI downward. Seeing no improvement in output of raw steel, autos, trucks, electric power and rail freight, along with a decline in the average work week, we forecast a decline of 4 percent in industrial production in July, following similar declines in May and June.

This Friday, as on the third Friday of each month, the current option series will expire on option related stocks and market indexes. Technical type traders and speculators will be especially alert to this often volatile option expiration session.

In general, we look for a "Dog Days of Summer" trading range with a more optimistic upside potential after the kids go back to school and Labor Day has come and gone.

THE ARTS

Companions meet to support the Bard

By Terri Giles
Special to the Sun

The first Monday of each month a potluck dinner is held at Virginia Beach Bow Creek Recreation center to help further an appreciation of the works of William Shakespeare.

The Bard's Companions is a support group for Virginia Beach's Shakespeare-by-the-Sea Festival. Coordinator Lucinda Burke said there are about 30 active members "and we're always looking for more."

The support group is responsible for selling advance tickets to the plays, placing brochures and posters locally, selling advertisements for the performances and on performance evenings, working as greeters, ushers, or gift shop personnel.

Other than the social and intrinsic benefits of the organization, there is an extra incentive to be a "companion." Volunteers who take an active part in the group's projects are entitled to attend the opening night performance of each play free of charge. The volunteers also attend the reception following the opening night presentation.

The Bard's Companions published a cookbook last season as the main fund raiser. Burke says that she is trying to get the cookbook into a local bookstore but has not yet been successful. The cookbook will be available in the gift shop at the Pavilion.

Another facet of the Bard's Companions is an eight-member Art Committee. The Second Annual Shakespeare-by-the-Sea Art Show will be presented in the theater lobby of the Pavilion on performance evenings.

Art Coordinator Vivian Bradlee said the purpose of the Art Show was to "support area artists of merit. It benefits the Festival in that it's an added attraction and of interest to the audience." The Committee invites 12 different artists each year trying to select—a balanced—but varied group.

The members of the Art Committee also exhibit in the show. Approximately 100 pieces of art will be available for viewing and purchase. The exhibition will include watercolors, oils, acrylics, sculpture, batik, drawings, etchings, handmade paper construction, stained glass, collages, and silhouettes.

The Art Show will be open one hour prior to curtain time and during intermission.

"We anticipate an increase in professional reputation," Brad-lee said. "We want to present a quality show that artists will vie with each other to enter."

The Bard's Companions meet year-round. There is no prerequisite to belong, except a desire to support the Shakespeare Festival.

Enthusiasm For Shakespeare Sparked By Program

By Terri Giles
Special to the Sun

Eleven devoted Virginia Beach students have chosen to spend their summer evenings in the theater instead of on the beach, in the malls or just relaxing at home.

They are learning the methodology of Elizabethan stage at Virginia Beach Junior High School, through the Shakespearean Apprentice program.

Four nights per week, the students work through the stage combat classes taught by Jerry Pope, speech and diction by Penny Martin, dance and movement instruction offered by Mary Ellen and, character studies, by Marianne Carlucci.

The culmination of the classes allow students to perform as servants in "Much Ado About Nothing" and revelers in "Two Gentlemen of Verona." This year's Shakespeare By-The-Sea Festival productions.

But the class is not only for teenagers. College graduates, housewives and others also participate. The common bond is love of the theater — and enthusiasm.

William S. Carroll, a theater arts major at Norfolk State, said he participates out of "an endless, aching need for theater of any kind."

Lisa Overton of Cox High School added that "the program offers the best education of its kind available. I've learned how the theater developed and the differences between Elizabethan times and now."

Shorty East, a mother, said she participates in the program because of the "fantastic instruction" and how much she's learned from the excellent Shakespearean staff.

Another participant in the workshop, David Hirth, presently works for a local marketing company. Hirth was previously a model and acted in television commercials.

"I auditioned for the Shakespearean plays. I thought it would be easy. Boy, was I wrong!" Hirth said. "The director (Henry Deshields) suggested this workshop. I've learned so much!"

Workshop participant Kerri Snyder is a Norfolk Academy student who is attending the Governor's Magnet School at Old Dominion University during the day and devoting her nights to the study of Shakespeare.

Diction coach Penny Martin said she enjoys the students and their efforts. She said her desire is to see the program offered year-round.

Marianne Carlucci also speaks highly of the students, praising them for their dedication, hard work, and commitment.

Craft Days Sponsored By Museum

VBEA workshops take time and much effort

to undergo three in-class evaluations or risk losing their teaching certificate, according to Chapman.

He said between the meeting and discussions afterward, it took a total of about 45 hours of staff work before going ahead with the details of the workshop. That time also includes time spent getting approval from the VBEA president and state representatives for the BTAP program.

The next phase is to begin work on the details, Chapman said. A date and place are set for the workshop. For the new teachers' workshop, September 24 was decided on as the best date. Chapman said that by the third week of school, most new teachers have settled into the routine would have the time to attend a workshop.

The amount of time given to a workshop helps determine what will be on the agenda, he said. For example, the BTAP workshop will start at 5 p.m. and continue through 8 p.m., including time for meals, leaving about two hours for the actual workshop.

"Now we're saying, 'We've got two hours and let's make the best of it,'" Chapman said. He said this workshop will probably include speakers who have been in the BTAP program.

Once an agenda is set, a decision has to be made about what materials will be needed for the workshop and who will provide those materials.

The most important phase in the process, according to Chapman, is getting people to attend the workshop. Although some members will attend just because they saw an announcement in the VBEA newsletter, he said that is a very small minority.

For the BTAP workshop, they are sending individual letters to teachers, inviting them to attend. In addition, Chapman said two flyers plus a notice in the newsletter will be published. VBEA representatives will also be talking to new teachers, encouraging them to attend.

It takes about three to four hours for publicity, including a total of about eight hours of representatives taking a few minutes to talk to new teachers, according to Chapman.

Chapman said with some workshops like the BTAP workshop, the VBEA arranges to give teachers credit for attending on their personal records.

Just before the workshop is ready to begin, the staff has to spend about five hours setting up materials for the session and making sure all last-minute details are taken care of, Chapman said.

The ultimate goal is to put on the best workshop possible. Chapman said teachers often say that in-service programs are not all they should be, so the VBEA has "to set the model for what in-service should be."

"I like to put on a good workshop because I think that puts pressure on the others putting on workshops to do better," he said.

Once the workshop is over, there still is more work to be done. Chapman said a letter is sent out to workshop participants, asking for input about the session. Teachers with individual problems are invited to come and talk with VBEA staff members.

Throughout the school year, the VBEA watches issues covered in workshops to see if another workshop might be needed again next year, he said. Then the process begins all over again.

Virginia Beach Education Association President Rob Jones holds up an education poster for VBEA board members to see.

Inspection Can Prevent Costly Repairs When Buying A House

Although it generally costs less to buy an existing house than to build one, buyers of existing houses in Virginia Beach should give them close inspection or they may find themselves doing a lot of construction work at extra expense.

Bring a pencil, paper, tape measure, step ladder, flashlight, coveralls, hand level, screwdriver and binoculars for the inspection.

Walk around the house's exterior twice, checking the foundation, drainage and siding on the first trip, and looking at the windows, gutter and roof on the second.

Don't hesitate to talk to the neighbors, they often have a wealth of information. Find out the reputation of the contractor who built the house.

A leaking basement is a major concern for most home buyers. A wet basement can make the entire home uncomfortable and cause structural problems.

A wet basement may be easily remedied, however, if the dampness is caused by broken gutters and downspouts. If the problem is a result of improper grading of the lot, however, regarding, or excavation to put in drainage ditches is much more costly.

To determine if water has caused structural damage, take a sharp instrument and poke it into exposed beams and joints in the basement. If the wood is soft and damaged, there could be moisture problems.

Next, check the attic to determine the amount and kind of insulation used. In checking wall insulation, take off the face plate from an electric outlet on an exterior wall and use a flashlight to look into the recess. It sometimes is possible to see the insulation this way. It is recommended that you turn off the power before making an inspection.

Are there cracks around the windows, door frames and other places where dissimilar building places meet? The house can be made more air-tight and insulation can be added, but the costs of doing so should be taken into consideration when deciding on a purchase price.

If the house has an oil or gas central heating system, ask for a report on the combustion efficiency. Such tests often are provided free through a utility company's audit program.

If the test report is not available, ask to see last year's heating bill, but keep in mind that they are not as accurate an indication as the combustion efficiency test.

Check sinks for leaks and drainage. If sinks drain slowly, it could indicate the septic tank drainage area is in bad repair. If the sinks are stained, there could be a problem with high mineral content in the water.

Check around the toilet for loose fittings or soft flooring. A damaged wax seal frequently permits a slow, invisible, but destructive leak.

Determine when the septic tank was last pumped. If not within five years, the system may need repair or replacement. Some lenders mandate a septic tank inspection before approving a home loan.

Water pressure can be checked by turning on several taps simultaneously. Often, pressure changes can be adjusted if the pressure tank itself is in good shape.

Many home buyers are not capable of inspecting an electrical system. If the other house systems meet approval, hire a house inspector to check the electrical system. Be sure to know if the house has copper or aluminum wiring.

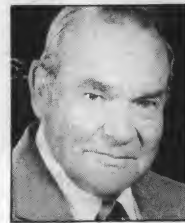

When the choice of homes is narrowed to one or two possibilities, bring in an expert to help you make your final selection. Ask for an inspector who is a member of the American Society of Home Inspectors, a professional organization that maintains high standards and provides training and continuing education for its members.

Cockrell's 33 Years "Speak For Themselves"

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

A 33-year career with the Virginia Beach Agriculture Department and the Princess Anne County Extension Office began when a county agent told E.R. "Dick" Cockrell he was in the wrong job.

Cockrell said the agent, Max Swain, used to come by the vocational agriculture class Cockrell was teaching in a Princess Anne County high school and encouraged him to join the extension office.

"He didn't stop harrasing me for two years," he said in a comfortable Southern accent.

On July 1, 1953, Cockrell became assistant county agent. On Oct. 1, 1986, he will be retiring from his job as director of the Virginia Beach Agriculture Department.

Cockrell's farming roots go back even further than 1953. He said he was born and raised on his father's farm in Virginia. All through high school, his only ambition was to work on the family farm, although he said one of his teachers, "Miss Lil," kept insisting he should go on to school.

Eighteen months after Cockrell graduated from high school, he said he decided to go to Virginia Polytechnic Institute, where he studied Agriculture. The black-and-white diploma hangs on one wall of his office.

He came to Princess Anne, Va., to teach, then joined the extension office. One of his first duties involved working with the local 4-H. He said, ironically, one of the last things he plans to do will be with 4-H.

Two years later, Cockrell became the extension county agent. He held that post until 1963, when Princess Anne County became incorporated into the city of Virginia Beach. The extension office was eventually renamed the "Department of Agriculture" and Cockrell became the director.

"I'm going to miss coming to the office and doing what I do," he said.

One of the things he said he will miss most is his close contact with people. He said he is proud of his association with 4-H. "Helping young people grow and develop and become responsible adults — I'm really proud of that," Cockrell said. "I've been associated with the building of people."

He said some people talk about clients they have; he talks about the agricultural community in terms of weddings and funerals he has attended and friends he has made. "I developed such a close relationship with many people in agriculture," he said, with a note of affection in his voice. "I have counted people as a tremendous and important part of my life."

Another important aspect of his job, he said, is representing agriculture in the city's economy. The city's economy is very diverse, he said, and it was his job to see that agriculture had a part in the total economy. As a result, he has been on the Virginia Beach Development Council and is a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

Cockrell adds, modestly, that "anyone could have done that, but I was in the driver's seat."

In fact, Cockrell prefers not to talk about his accomplishments. He said his "33 years should speak for themselves."

But his associates are more willing to praise him. "People will never forget him and never forget what he's done for agriculture," Sandy Harrell, Cockrell's secretary for 27 years, said. "It will always be Dick Cockrell's office."

Harrell said when she was interviewed by Cockrell for the job, she knew she wanted to work for him because he was so friendly. "There couldn't be a finer person to work for," she said.

City Manager Thomas Muehlenbeck said in a statement announcing Cockrell's retirement that he left "no stone unturned" when it came to agriculture.

Harrell added that he is admired—and respected—by his colleagues and often, they come to him for personal advice.

Cockrell said there is one thing about city government he will not miss. He said he often has to attend meetings every night for four or five nights a week, something he said can get very fatiguing. Now, he said he will be able to eat supper with his wife.

Part of the reason he decided to retire was so that he would be able to spend more time with his family, he said. Cockrell said retirement will also give him a chance to travel and do some professional public speaking.

He said the only thing that concerns him is suffering from "people withdrawal" by losing the contacts he had through the department. He plans to work with the Farm Bureau and other agricultural groups in the city, as well as working with the Chamber of Commerce and sitting on the 4-H Board and the Tidewater Health Care Board of Directors.

"I don't intend to give it all up," he said. "I'll keep my voluntary involvement with groups for a long as they will have me."

The association was initially contacted by the Red Cross in an effort to bring in a large number of donors, according to McDaniel. Asby said summer is traditionally a time for lower donations and increased demand.

"It just isn't convenient for people to donate," Asby said. In addition, she said, there is about a 20 percent increase in the use of blood during the summer. There are more car accidents, and more people take time off for elective surgery.

Vakos said the Red Cross did a great job of the drive, coming in and setting everything up in a matter of minutes.

McDaniel would like to see similar drives held in the future. "I'd like to see this become an annual thing," she said.

Pungo radio tower costs increase over $200,000

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

The city's radio tower at Pungo will cost $398,550 more than the $280,790 allocated in the Capital Improvement Program.

Councilwoman Reba McClanahan voted against allocating the additional funds because, she said, she could not believe that "anything is going to rise that much in cost."

She said the cost was a lot more than originally estimated.

When the project first was listed in the 1978-1982 CIP the cost was estimated at $110,000.

City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck said that the tower construction originally estimated by the design consultant, MMM Design Group, at $397,500, was now estimated at $570,000.

Reasons affecting the increase are:

The tower, originally designed to withstand wind speeds up to 106 miles per hour, is being designed to withstand hurricane wind speeds of up to 135 miles per hour, increasing construction costs to $150,000.

The original CIP estimate includes the design of a guyed tower, but because of the limiting size of the city parcel, a fixed foundation, free standing tower will be used which is more expensive.

The contract for the tower has been awarded to Swager Communications, the low bidder of five, for $495,800.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley said that public safety communications in the city have been deficient, especially in the southern part. She said she shared McClanahan's concerns about the expense, but did not want to delay the project further. Muehlenbeck said that the project has been bid twice.

Police Chief Charles Wall said that public safety has no radio contact with large areas in the southern end of the city. The new 400-foot radio tower is needed to meet frequency requirements of the FCC. The present tower at the Plaza Fire Station, designed to accommodate ten VHF antennas, has 16 attached.

The tower will serve public safety communications and public utilities.

Vice Mayor Meyera Oberdorff noted that the project has been bumped from the CIP eight or nine years that she is aware of.

Many Changes In Virginia Beach Farming In Past, For Future

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

During the past 33 years, Department of Agriculture Director E.R. "Dick" Cockrell has seen the amount of farmland in Virginia Beach decrease by almost 50 percent, while farm production hasn't decreased.

Cockrell said the change is due to an increase in population, spreading from the north to the more rural south. He said increased productivity is due to a more scientific method of farming.

"The efficiency of agriculture has improved so rapidly that production is as great or greater than when I was first here," he said.

Farmers have begun using computers, just like many other businessmen, according to Cockrell. He said with a computer, a grain farmer can have a hookup with the Chicago Board of Trade and know the price of grain instantly.

In addition, local dairy farmers are benefitting from embryo transplants in dairy cows, Cockrell said. An embryo calf from a purebred cow is implanted in an ordinary cow, he said, allowing one cow to produce several purebred calves for several farms.

But Cockrell said one thing hasn't changed. He said Virginia Beach farmers are still "outstanding family people" who are proud of their strong family ties.

The future of farming in Virginia Beach depends a lot on city council policy, especially concerning the Green Line, and economic pressures on farmers, according to Cockrell.

He said the corn, wheat and soybean markets are depressed right now, so local farmers might turn to other options to make ends meet.

Eventually, Cockrell said some farmers may turn to lawn care and landscaping as a branch of agriculture. He said he sees that area expanding, "because that need is directly proportionate to the needs of the people." There may also be an increase in "pick-your-own" operations, he added.

Some local farmers may give in to economic pressures by simply selling their land, Cockrell said. There is a desire for large-lot living, where people interested in getting away from the city could buy a few acres of land to put a house on.

Cockrell said although his "crystal ball" for predicting the future may not be as good as some, he said he does not see the current trends changing very much.

Beach Woman Striving To Make Her Character "The Next Mickey Mouse"

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

For Jacqueline Molton, a Virginia Beach housewife, the road to fame is through a huge, shaggy, brown dog named "Fleabag."

Fleabag is actually a costume that Molton wears to Christmas parties, mall events and hospitals. She said she began making her appearances just before Christmas of last year.

Her audience is anyone from "one to 99" she said, but her

"When you see a crippled child in a wheelchair, totally helpless, and their face lights up to see you come in the room, it makes it all worthwhile."

—Jaqueline Molton

primary audience is children.

Dressed up as Fleabag, Molton said she tries to teach children about safety and good nutrition, with a few magic tricks thrown in. She has a table full of synthetic food to help children learn how to plan good meals; a gun that shoots snakes; posters warning about the dangers of smoking; and a wooden doghouse, made by Molton's husband Earl, with a magnetic roof so she can stick her props on it.

In addition, she said she has an attic full of free literature that she hands out on every appearance. She said she tries to "put something in their hand" to make sure she get her point across.

All together, it has cost Molton about $4,000 for all the props and the costume.

"My dream is to be the next Mickey Mouse," she said.

But it hasn't always been as easy as she had hoped. The first problem came up when Molton got the costume back from the seamstress. There were many problems with it, and eventually, the whole costume had to be redone by another seamstress.

More recently, her husband went on strike, so Molton is working the night shift at a local factory, preventing her from taking many engagements.

In addition, the costume itself is heavy, hot and hard to transport from place to place. "It isn't as easy as it looks," she said.

Still, Molton said she is always at her typewriter, sending letters to celebrities in hopes of being discovered. "I know I'm going to make it," she said. "I'll never give it up. It's something I'll always want to do."

So far, Fleabag has been a big hit with everyone who has seen him, according to Molton. She gets a big laugh when she tells an audience that Fleabag's magic word is "pizza."

One of her biggest projects is going to visit a sick child in the hospital. "When you see a crippled child in a wheelchair, totally helpless, and their face lights up to see you come in the room, it makes it all worthwhile," she said.

Molton said some people might think she is crazy for dressing up in a costume and making appearances. But she said she is doing it not only for the fame, but because she likes to make people laugh.

"If I could afford to do this free, I would," she said. "With all the hatred in the world, what's wrong with trying to do something good?"

Pine Bark Beetles Active In Virginia Beach

The current drought has been very hard on the street trees and forests in Virginia Beach. An added problem brought on by the drought has been an increased incidence of pine bark beetle attack.

Over the last few weeks, the local Department of Forestry office has received a number of reports on this pest. Detection flights in the surrounding area have confirmed increasing beetle activity.

The pine beetle should be taken seriously by every homeowner or rural landowner who has large mature pine trees on the property. Old, large pines are the prime candidates for bark beetle attack.

Many older residential areas in Virginia Beach, with large numbers of large pine are particularly susceptible to a pine bark beetle outbreak. The insect can quickly kill a large pine and will spread to neighboring trees if not detected.

In residential areas, large pines are expensive to remove, costing several hundred dollars in many cases. In rural areas, pine bark beetles can seriously impact on timber values.

Pine bark beetles are attracted to trees under stress. This would include just about any pine tree under the current dry conditions. Trees damaged by construction activity, wind work, or lightning strikes are particularly susceptible. Wounds along the main trunk are easy entrance points for the pest. In newer subdivisions, construction damaged trees are very vulnerable to attack. In rural forests, lightning-struck trees are frequently the center of new infestations.

A homeowner can detect the pine bark beetle easily. A tree whose needles suddenly fade from green, to yellow, to reddish-brown has probably been attacked. Small white pitch tubes will begin to appear along the main trunk. Red boring dust, which looks like fine red sawdust, will collect in bark crevices and at the base of the pine. If you find faded needles or heavy pitch tube concentrations should be removed immediately. Neighboring trees can be treated with an appropriate pesticide by a reputable tree service. Remaining trees should be kept well-watered and fertilized.

The pine bark beetle can be devastating to a landscape heavily populated with pines. They can also cost the homeowner plenty in removal costs. Rural forest stands can lose several thousand dollars in timber value.

Call Department of Forestry at 488-1921 for advice on handling the problem.

Expanded Transportation Benefit Elderly

Older Virginia Beach Medicaid recipients are benefitting from expanded transportation services made available through state and local cooperation, according to the Virginia Department for the Aging.

Utilizing vehicles already owned by area agencies on aging, transportation will not only be more readily available but also more cost effective. An agreement among the Department for the Aging, the Department of Medical Assistance Services (Medicaid), and the Health Department can expand transportation options available in communities, increase access to transportation services for Medicaid recipients, and reduce the need for expensive vehicles owned and operated by local service agencies.

Wilda M. Ferguson, Commissioner of the Department for the Aging, said the agreement is another example of state agencies' cooperating to provide more services with fewer resources.

"The same van that delivers a hot meal to a frail elderly person also may now be used to transport a sick child to the doctor's office," she said.

Ferguson also said such cooperative agreements help reduce the administrative costs involved in delivering health and social services.

The departments have been operating the transportation option for the past year.

Voting board changes councilmen's votes

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

The City Council's electronic voting board has played havoc with the votes of Councilmen Albert W. Balko and John D. Moss.

It started last week. When Balko votes yes the board voted no and vice versa for Moss. Since they often voted on opposite sides, the final tally was unchanged, but the Council members wanted their votes to be shown correctly.

Moss asked at the start of the meeting Monday that his vote last week on a CBN application for student housing be changed to reflect his negative intention. The board showed him in favor.

Councilwoman Reba McClanan said that she understood that for a vote to be changed, the issue should be under discussion

Moss said he thought he voted no.

Mayor Robert G. Jones said that the problem was with a malfunctioning of the board. He had noticed that Balko's light was one color on the console and another on the board.

McClanan said she had no problem with malfunctioning, but "there are lots of votes I would have changed."

Moss withdrew his request. He was vindicated later when his and Balko's lights went wild again. After changing their votes for the record several times, they gave up on the board and voted orally.

Toward the end of the meeting, Council unanimously voted to allow him to change his CBN vote of last week.

At the same time, City Clerk Ruth Smith said she would have the electronic system checked.

Local Consumers Should Be Wary Of Pull Tab Hoax

Reynolds Aluminum Recycling Company is warning Virginia Beach consumers to beware of a hoax which has surfaced in the area.

"This hoax involves kidney dialysis treatment," Michael Timpane, area business manager of Reynolds Recycling, said. "People are told that they should save their pull tabs from aluminum cans, and that Reynolds or some other aluminum company will donate to a kidney patient a minute on a dialysis machine for each tab. This is absolutely not true."

Timpane said Reynolds has never sponsored such a program and according to the Aluminum Association in Washington, D.C., neither has any other aluminum company.

"What's more, such a program is not even needed," Timpane said. "According to the National Kidney Foundation, in most cases the cost of dialysis treatments is covered under the Medicare End Stage Renal Disease Program, established in 1973. The Foundation tells us that no one is denied treatment for lack of funds."

"We encourage community groups to establish aluminum recycling programs, and to recycle the entire can, not just the tab," he said. "The entire can is worth a lot more than just the tab. We'll pay the group for their aluminum, and they can then donate the money to the National Kidney Foundation, or any other worthwhile organization they may choose."

"We just hate to see people start collecting tabs for non-existent program and then be disappointed," Timpane added.

New Commander At Fort Story

Lt. Col. Norman G. Beatty recently succeeded Col. Charles W. Higgins Jr. as commander of the 4th Brigade, 80th Division in Fort Story.

Higgins, commander of the 4th Brigade since August 1983, brought his 30-year Army career to an end with the ceremony. He said his service years were marked by "fascinating challenges in service to a great nation."

"Colonel Higgins and the 4th Brigade have led the way to prove that the Total Army concept can and does work," said Maj. Gen. John P. Henderson, 80th Division Commander. In January, the brigade was selected from 24 Infantry-One Station Unit Training units to perform the first "vertical displacement" at Fort Benning, Ga.

"I am honored and humbled to succeed Colonel Higgins," Beatty said. "We are facing our most important mission in peacetime — establishing an Army Training Center at Fort Bragg (North Carolina). But with your help I know we will succeed."

At the ceremony, Higgins received the Legion of Merit, signed by Secretary of the Army John O. Marsh Jr., for "30 years of devoted and effective service."

A Certificate of Appreciation signed by Maj. Gen. William R. Berkman, Chief of the Army Reserve, and a Retired Reserve Transfer signed by Lt. Gen. Charles D. Franklin, First U.S. Army Commanding General. Mrs. Higgins received a Certificate of Appreciation signed by Gen. John A. Wickham Jr., Chief of Staff of the U.S. Army, for her "unfailing support and understanding" of her husband throughout his career.

Broken promises led to life with God: Beamer

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

For years, Bill Beamer said, he had been turning his back on God. He said he used to pray, asking God to help him through the rough places in his life, promising that "maybe someday I'll serve You."

Beamer, international director for the Full Gospel Business Men's Fellowship International, recently gave his testimony at an open meeting of the Virginia Beach chapter.

It wasn't until Beamer had given up a successful career in the Army and moved to Newport News to start a real estate business with his two brothers that he kept his promise to God.

Beamer said he was driving back on Route 60 from taking a very difficult real estate exam that he had studied hard for feeling very proud of himself because he felt he had done well. Suddenly, he remembered all the promises he had made to God, and he said he realized that was the time to keep those promises.

"My mind turned from the joy of that exam to the sorrow of a life wasted," Beamer said, his voice choked with emotion.

He said that was when he was "overcome by the presence of God." Twenty miles down the road, he said, he came back to reality, promising that he would never turn back, a promise he said he has kept to this day.

Beamer said he was raised in a Christian home. "My mom was one of those praying moms," he said. "Mom just read it (the Bible), believed it and put it into practice." He credits his mother's prayers with getting him through college and a stint in Korea.

During one of his assignments in France, an incident made him realize he was not giving his young son and daughter the kind of religious background he had received.

A young girl, after a fight with her husband, dove into the ocean, at low tide, hoping to scare her husband. Beamer said she dove into a mudbank and suffocated before anyone could get her out. As duty officer, Beamer had to take all of the girl's things and store them.

He said that is when he knew the girl could have been his daughter, and he wasn't giving his children much religious instruction. He and his wife decided to start going to church with the children.

But Beamer said version, life was no easier. "It would be nice to say I never had a problem after that, but that's not true," he said.

Beamer's son Billy died at age 20 from complications of leukemia. He said the family would have never survived without their faith.

Christian businessmen's group meets

The Virginia Beach chapter of the Full Gospel Business Men's Fellowship International meets every first and third Saturday of the month for a breakfast at the Kitchen Door, next to the Open Door Chapel on Virginia Beach Boulevard.

Once a month, the group opens the breakfast to the public.

President Jerry Hoover said the organization will be adding teachings and testimony to their regular monthly meeting, open to businessmen only.

Results of the "most active time" discussed at Beach CCO meeting

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

Mayor Robert Jones told the council of Civic Organizations representatives that he has "never recalled personally a more active time" for Virginia Beach City Council than the past two months.

Jones outlined city council accomplishments and fielded questions at the civic council's recent regular meeting.

A capital improvement program to ease the backlog of schools and roads, worked out by City Manager Thomas Muehlenbeck and tentatively approved by the council, is much more solid than a previous bond referendum rejected by voters last year, according to Jones.

The city is asking voters to approve bond referendums of $70 million for roads and $86 million for schools over a period of about 10 years.

"The great problem is there is just not enough money," Jones said.

He said the city can raise about

With just about two weeks left to get questions on the November ballot, two issues have been raised as possible referendum material.

Both require charter changes which have to be authorized by the General Assembly.

November ballot is a referendum on the direct election of mayor. City Council Monday afternoon adopted a resolution requesting the state General Assembly to authorize the charter change authorizing the direct election of mayor, subject to a referendum to determine whether the voters want the change.

In this report to Council last

New grading scale won't lower high Virginia Beach education standards

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

A recent decision to lower the grading scale by the Virginia Beach School Board deserves high marks, according to Virginia Beach Education Association Uniserv Director James Chapman.

"I think the decision the board made indicates they listened to the administration's research, but also were very sensitive to the concerns of the parents," he said.

The decision to change the scale came during a workshop, where the board's research staff presented the results of national, state and local studies on grading scales. The new scale was a composite of suggestions from school board members drawn up by board Chairman James Fletcher.

The new scale is 94 to 100 for an A; 86 to 93 for a B; 78 to 85 for a C; 70 to 77 for a D; and below 70 for failing. The old scale gave a 95 to 100 for an A; 88 to 84 for a B; 81 to 87 for a C; 75 to 80 for a D; and below 75 for failing.

Some parents said the old scale was too harsh and that it kept some students from being admitted to college.

A study presented at the workshop by Joseph Benson of the board's research staff showed that out of 24 college admissions offices, 16 said the old scale would not necessarily keep a student from being admitted. Benson said colleges also consider class rank, extracurricular activities and personal or written interviews, and said blaming the grading scale is "a simplistic conclusion for a very complex situation."

Ed Brown, director of the board's research staff, said a phone survey taken in the last few weeks of all the school systems in Virginia, 37 used the same scale as Virginia Beach, while 16 used a scale similar to the one just adopted by the board.

Brown said that grading is not an exact science, and there is no scale that can be considered the most effective and most fair. A study of national school systems presented to the board by Brown showed that 29 of the systems surveyed had no numerical grading system and 31 of the systems with a numerical system had 24 different types.

Chapman said in a telephone interview that the wide variety of scales indicates that the school board's decision was more political than educational.

"I don't feel the new grading scale will lower the standards of education," he said.

Teachers will adapt to the grading scale, no matter what it is, according to Chapman. He said it is more important to have a quality curriculum.

Board member Ulysses Spiva said during the meeting that the board was spending too much time on something that plays a minor role in education.

Board member John Fahey added that although many parents he spoke with favored a change in the grading scale, they praised the school system for the high quality of education in Virginia Beach.

Chapman said the VBSEA did not have time to take an official position on the grading scale before the board acted. He said they were polling members for their opinion before taking a stand.

He said he feels the new scale will raise expectations overall and benefit the students.

Problems Should Have Been Discovered Sooner With School Site

The City of Virginia Beach and the Virginia Beach school system seem to be at odds over a school site for the proposed Ocean Lakes elementary school.

In 1983, the school system accepted 25 acres of land from developer R.G. Moore to build an elementary school in the Ocean Lakes subdivision.

In returning for agreeing to provide the elementary school site and a site for a high school, the city allowed Moore to build at higher densities on other parts of the subdivision.

The school system says the elementary school site is undevelopable, and they want $610,000 to buy a new site somewhere else. The money would be put in a November referendum for school funding.

The real question should be: Why didn't the school system or the city realize the land for the Ocean Lakes elementary school could not be developed before now?

City council members are demanding to know why the school system can't build on the present site. Some council members say they do not want to put the Ocean Lakes elementary school proposal on the referendum.

The real question should be: Why didn't the school system or the city realize the land could not be developed before now? There were three years when the developer, the city or the school system could have found problems and reworked the agreements.

At any rate, the city is probably right in denying more funding for a new site, at least for now. Perhaps the best solution was suggested by Pungo Councilwoman Barbara Henley. She feels the developer should give the city another site within the Ocean Lakes subdivision to build the school. That way, the school system would get its elementary school and the city would not have to put up $610,000 for a new site.

Child care a priority

A committee made up of 11 city departments, the Virginia Beach School Board, the United Way of South Hampton Roads, the Virginia Department of Social Services and several other groups recently released a report on the state of child care in Virginia Beach.

The Virginia Beach Child Development Committee found there is a "very real need for quality child care." About 7.7 percent of Virginia Beach's population is under the age of five, the committee found there were 266 child care facilities, but it also discovered that many of those businesses were temporary, or had changed names. "This would indicate that if professionals, familiar with the day care needs of the community, have difficulty in finding available services," the report stated, "it must be tremendously so for the uninformed or new citizens of Virginia Beach to find child care services."

The committee found that the areas of greatest need are in the central portions of the city, just above the Green Line.

"...If professionals, familiar with the day care needs of the community, have difficulty in finding available services, it must be tremendously so for the uninformed or new citizens of Virginia Beach to find child care services."—Report from the Virginia Beach Child Development Committee.

In addition, a telephone survey found that out of 152 companies in Virginia Beach, 94 percent did not have child care programs.

The committee made several recommendations for improving child care in the city. In an effort to educate future parents, the committee is recommending offering child growth and development courses for students in seventh grade.

A central information and referral system for child care is also being recommended. The committee would also like to see a private or public day care program set up for low-income families not involved in programs like Headstart.

Still another recommendation would have the city, United Way and the Chamber of Commerce encourage employer-supported day care.

There does seem to be a need for quality child care in Virginia Beach. The Virginia Beach Sun supports the recommendations of the Virginia Beach Child Development Committee.

Hopefully, the situation will go beyond just a report and result in some positive action. After all, the children are the future leaders and citizens of Virginia Beach.—S.M.B.

Resident Praises Efforts To "Clean Up" Beach

Editor:

As a life-long resident and businessman of Virginia Beach for over 30 years, I congratulate our city council representative, Bob Fentress, and the City of Virginia Beach Police Department for the excellent job they have done in returning our city to a family resort.

In this past season, the boardwalk scenario has changed from roaming street gangs and obnoxious drunks, to that of parents pushing baby strollers and couples, young and old alike, walking hand in hand.

The same change can also be found on Atlantic Avenue. The watergun-crushing punks screaming obscenities and blocking intersections are gone. In their place, tourist-filled trolley buses travel smoothly with the steady flow of traffic.

Due to the influence of nature and the Virginia Beach sand replenishment program, we have the cleanest, widest, most attractive beach in over 30 years. These aspects not only benefit the thousands of tourists who visit our area year after year, but also improve the overall quality of life for all residents.

I feel the increased police presence at the beach and the personal interest shown by Chief Wall, whom I have personally seen patrolling the boardwalk, has converted our beach from a rowdy honky-tonk to a family oriented resort.

As a former outspoken critic of the Virginia Beach Police Department, I must applaud their efforts in returning Virginia Beach to the leading, family vacation resort, despite the recent publicity to the contrary, published in the Norfolk-based newspapers.

I am proud to say, "I love Virginia Beach!!!"

Lottery Solution To Tax Increases

Editor:

Many of the Sun's readers will remember that for five years I have been telling the people of Virginia that the needs of this Commonwealth were growing at a pace that the traditional method and level of taxation was not capable of meeting. Five times I have suggested a state lottery as a way to head off a state revenue crisis.

Now the Governor tells us that there is no way that Virginia can solve its highway and transportation problems without a rapid increase in the sales tax on automobiles from 2 percent to 4 percent, the state's gasoline tax 4 cents more per gallon, and also a 1 percent increase in the state sales tax from 4 percent to 5 percent.

I ask the Sun's readers this question: Given a choice, would you rather meet our highway and transportation needs with those direct tax increases, or meet most of the new revenue requirements through a state lottery?

Many say they oppose a lottery because they think that Virginia has never had one and can continue to get along without it. But we have had them before.

Lotteries were in fact used in the Colonial period to finance public projects, and even Thomas Jefferson remarked that "a lottery is a wonderful thing; it takes the taxation only upon the willing."

I plan to reintroduce my lottery bill next month at the special session of the General Assembly. I will propose that one-third of the estimated $250 million raised by the state, through sales of lottery tickets be deposited into a special fund for highway and transportation revenue bonds. The remaining two-thirds would be designated for "other highway needs" in the Commonwealth.

As always, my bill would allow for the people to decide for themselves through a statewide referendum on the lottery. The choice really is up to the Sun readers. If they would like to see a state referendum on a lottery, they should tell their state senators and delegates how they feel, and they should do so before September 15.

In short, it is time to send Richmond a message.

Babalas needs lesson from song

Editor:

My granddaughter has a song that she loves to sing. It is very applicable to the recent decision acquitting Mr. Peter Babalas of violating the "Conflict of Interest Laws." The song goes to the heart of the matter and not the judges' verdict. It simply says:

"Stretching the truth is telling a lie, Angels are honest, that's why they can fly, There ain't no reason for telling a lie, Tell the truth, tell the truth, tell the truth."

Mr. Babalas may have been cleared under the letter of the law, but I doubt if he will be nominated for the "Tell the Truth Award of 1986."

Preparing child for school eases transition

LET'S TALK

By Rob Jones, president,
Virginia Beach Education Association

Whether you realize it or not, the opening of school is just around the corner. Your children are probably more than aware of the fact that their summer lifestyle is about to undergo a radical change.

Many of us just "fall" into a school year by reacting to a myriad of notices, and by rote fitting into schedules established by people paid to do those kinds of things. While we must react to these notices and adhere to the schedules, a little planning and preparation with your children may help make your transition from summer schedule to school regimen a little easier and reduce the frustrations that frequently arise.

Preparing the child

Does your child enjoy going to school? If there is some reservation about it, sit down with him or her and talk about it. Allow candid expressions without overreaction on your part. Sometimes, just empathy and support is all that is needed.

Has your child practiced good homework habits in the past? Plan now to set aside the same time and place to do homework.

Don't let, "I don't have any!" deter the homework pattern. There are always other things that can be done; supplemental readings, math drills. If the child knows that he or she is going to have to spend the time anyway, chances are assigned homework will soon be the preferred activity.

Plan to take time to talk to your child about homework assignments. The fact that you are interested will more than likely enhance his or her interest and lead to better performance. Look over the homework when it is completed, comment on the good parts and make some suggestions on the weaker parts.

Don't let a good grade or excellent performance get by with a casual shrug or a passing glance. Some excitement and a hug go a long way toward encouraging your child's continued high achievement. These loving expressions, if started early enough, reduce the dependency upon superficial rewards for doing the same thing.

Plan now to spend a few weekends or evenings at the museums, library, historical sites and other community and state resources that will be largely cost-free supplements to the education of your children.

Encourage your child to be part of extra-curricular activities, both in and out of school, such as Scouts, church youth groups and curriculum-related clubs. These activities provide an important balance in the learning and cultural growth processes, and sometimes provide an outlet for frustrations and even failures that emanate from the academics. The key is to maintain a proper balance between the academics and the extra-curricular activities.

Know about the school

Have you visited the school, talked to the teachers and the principal? Have you joined your PTA in the past or do you plan to join this year? The best way to find out about your child's school is to ask your child's teacher.

As teachers, our subject is excellence. We know that quality education requires concerned involvement of parents, teachers and the whole community. That is why we want you to not only visit your school, but to examine it: know how many children are in your child's class and how likely he or she is to get any special attention; know how many students your child's teacher has to teach during the course of a whole day or entire week; are teacher aides available and if so, how they are used; are there sufficient texts and other resource materials - are they free from sexual and racial stereotypes?

These are only a few of the many questions that you might ask. VBEA is very anxious for you to be actively involved in the educational process of the Virginia Beach Public Schools.

Call us and ask for our free publication entitled, "Let's Talk About Your Child's School - Does It Measure Up?" The number is 466-0202. Other available publications include: "We Want This To Be Your Child's Best Year in School," "Let's Talk About Your Child," and "Those Surprising Virginia Teachers."

To you and your child or children, have a good school year!

"Adopt-a-school" grows from infancy to success

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

This is the fourth in a series of articles about the Virginia Beach Education Association.

Two years ago, the newly-formed Virginia Beach Chamber of Commerce education committee was looking for a program to reach out to schools in the area, according to James Chapman, Virginia Beach Education Association UniServ Director and Chamber education committee member.

The committee decided on the "adopt-a-school" program, where a local business would offer services to a local school.

"We wanted to develop links between the schools and businesses," Dorothy Barber, school system representative on the Chamber committee, said.

Chapman said the VBEA helped with the initial set-up of the program, bringing in representatives from a successful program in Norfolk and writing to other schools who had a similar plan.

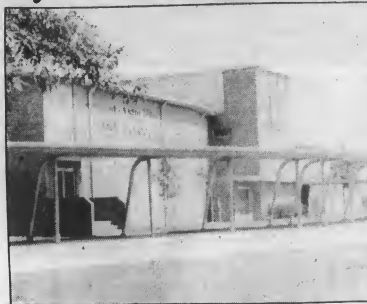

The VBEA also assisted with the pilot program, helping to present the program to the superintendent for approval.

Barber said eight schools were involved in the pilot program last year. "It went well, and we were able to assess all our strengths and weaknesses," she said.

"It's moving forward," Chapman said, "and we're really excited about it."

Barber said businesses offer to bring in speakers for career days, do tutoring, assist with athletic programs or just generally try to meet student needs at the schools they sponsor.

For example, she said, last year at Bayside High School, C & P Telephone donated personnel and heavy equipment to the school to help clear away some shrubbery on the school grounds. In addition, one of the local garden clubs donated new shrubbery and helped with the landscaping, she said.

Bayside High School is one of 12 schools participating in the "adopt-a-school" program. Photo by Stephanie Beyer.

The Navy's Dam Neck Guided Missile Training School also became involved, sponsoring the Center for Effective Learning, Barber said. They adapted computers with foot pedals and voice synthesizers to help handicapped children communicate, she said.

The Navy also held a year-long fundraiser, and took every child to the Ringling Brothers Circus, Barber said as a result of their work, the VBEA awarded the Dam Neck center the Friend of Education Award.

Lana O'Meara of the Tidewater Psychiatric Institute said the institute has been sponsoring First Colonial and Kempsville High Schools, since last year providing speakers on suicide and drug abuse, putting up bulletin boards, and offering tips on better job interviewing skills.

"It's a means of expanding education for the kids," O'Meara said.

Not only do students find out more about how businesses work, O'Meara said, but businesses get more exposure through the schools.

Barber said this year, approximately 12 schools and 12 businesses have been paired. About 40 more schools are interested in being involved in the program, she said.

"We've seen a tremendous growth and seen an increase in the number of businesses who are interested in working with us," Barber said.

The Chamber committee surveyed all the schools this year to see which ones wanted to be involved, according to Barber. Sponsors were matched with the schools that the businesses felt they could serve the best. The committee is also holding orientation sessions with principals and businesses.

Chapman said this year the VBEA is encouraging teachers who might know of a business interested in sponsoring their school to go out and actively solicit a sponsorship.

He said he believes bringing businesses in schools not only helps students, but helps to destroy myths about low-quality education and gives Virginia Beach schools credibility.

Upturn in market "a summertime surprise"

Wall Street The Week Ahead

By George T. Stagg

In the week ahead, we get the numbers on housing starts, personal income, and consumer prices for the month of July.

Consequently, I was discussing the subject of inflation with my golfing opponent this past weekend. I pointed out that the June figure for the Consumer Price Index was up 0.5 percent, the highest increase in seven months, and that July looks like another increase of about 0.2 percent.

He happens to be hooked on good Havana cigars, which everyone knows don't come cheap. Pulling the stub of his "stogie" from his mouth and stepping away from a 10-foot birdie putt he had been studying, he says to me, "You know, George, there are plenty of good 5 cent cigars in this country. The trouble is, they cost half-a-buck apiece. What this country needs is a good 5 cent nickel."

Good point.

Summer surprise

A lot of nickels went into Wall Street last week as the "Big Board" showed four consecutive days of 1,000 or more advancing issues and the Dow Industrial Average finished the week of 1855, up 72 points for the week. This "summertime surprise" action has set up a sea of change, in which Wall Street has shifted from a defensive mood to a more aggressive stance. It appears that the 10 percent pullback in July was nothing more than a technical correction in a long-term "bull market," rather than the beginning of a major downturn.

The bond market will be alert to the Federal Reserve's open market strategy meeting this week. While the Fed is expected to remain at even keel, the Street continues to hear rumblings of an orchestrated cut in interest rates being worked out between the United States, West Germany and Japan, which could bring our federal discount rate down another half point to 5 1/2%.

Mutual fund sales figures for July will be released this week. Sales for April, which included the deadline for IRA's, were at a $20-billion-plus rate. May saw sales drop off to about $16 billion, and June leveled off at $15 billion, where we anticipate July to come in. These are highly

Washington will be relatively quiet in the week ahead as Congress will be in recess. The House and Senate tax reform conferees are still hammering away at a compromise.

Once the tax reform is nailed down, Wall Street will be busy digesting the final form and making necessary adjustments. The effective date of the provisions will be of particular interest to many investors.

Firedogs Have History In Beach

The spotted "coach dog" has been a close companion of men and horses as far back as the ancient Egyptians. Paintings show a spotted dog following a chariot. The dalmatian received its name from the province of Dalmatia in the former Austro-Hungarian empire.

Why did the fire department take to this white and black spotted animal as a mascot? The earlier years of the fire department, after the bucket brigade and before the modern gasoline-engine powered fire trucks, was an era of horse-drawn steamers and ladder trucks.

A dalmatian with no training or previous experience with horses will often follow a horse, falling right behind it and matching the horse's stride.

Pirsch

The firemen took to this beautiful dog, and some say that they would actually run ahead of the steamers and locate the fires due to their keen sense of smell.

Very few people realize that the dalmatian is more than a companion to the fireman. The dogs have been trained to work with the firefighters by carrying equipment into burning buildings.

Dalmatians have also rescued people from smoke-filled rooms.

The dalmatian quickly learns who the members of the fire station are and is very friendly to children. Some mascots of Virginia Beach fire stations over the years had names like "Seatack," "Pirsch," and "Seagrave," "Lady," "Mack," and, of course, "Spot."

To report an emergency in Virginia Beach, dial 911. Remember to test your smoke detector.

THE ARTS

Candrea Interprets Shakespeare For Hearing-Impaired Audiences

By Terri Gilles
Special to the Sun

Ilene Candrea is making preparations for hearing-impaired visitors to enjoy special sign productions of the Shakespeare-By-The-Sea Festival.

"In the case of Shakespeare, the signs are more artistic. They must capture the flavor of what's written," Candrea said. "The style and language have to be expressed."

Neither Shakespeare or signing are new to Candrea. She studied theater for 15 years and began her career in signing at Gardner-Webb College in North Carolina, where she received a B.S. in psychology.

"I had a hearing-impaired roommate who liked to chat in the middle of the night. I got pretty good at reading signs with my eyes closed," she said laughing.

Candrea became an educational interpreter at the college and signed for such difficult courses as calculus, systems analysis, and chemistry.

Gardner-Webb is also where she became involved with artistic interpretation. She was the director of a 10-member mime troupe called "Signs Incorporated," composed mainly of deaf students.

"We interpreted music and did skits. Basically it's like choir singing, only we sang with our hands," she explained.

Since arriving in Tidewater with her Navy husband, Candrea has interpreted three plays. Working with Cultural Experiences Unlimited, she signed for signed for "Cinderella," "On Golden Pond," and "Beyond the Darkness."

The main focus with artistic interpretation is to choose the signs more carefully and deliberately, according to Candrea.

As a platform interpreter for the Shakespeare-By-The-Sea Festival, she will be costumed in black. The emphasis is on the hands, and bright colors would be distracting, she said. The signs also must be bigger and broader in order to be discerned.

For the productions, Candrea will be using a blend of American Sign Language and Signed Exact English.

Candrea works at Independence Center as a secretary-interpreter, where independent living skills are taught to disabled adults.

Basketball Star Receives Olympia Award

J.R. Reid of Virginia Beach, an outstanding basketball player for the last two seasons at Kempville High School, recently added the Southland Olympia Award to his long list of honors.

The Olympia Award, sanctioned by the United States Olympic Committee, is given to amateur athletes in the Olympic disciplines who demonstrate athletic skills, academic achievement and contribution to their sport.

Selections are made by a panel of past and present Olympic and world champions, among them: gold medalist Mike Johnson and Bob Mathias; speedskater Eric Heiden, winner of five golds at Lake Placid in 1980; Sheila Young Ocnowicz, a world champion in cycling and speedskating; Cathy Rigby, the renowned gymnast; Tracy Caulkins, who won three golds in swimming at Los Angeles; and Terry Schroeder, captain of the silver medal U.S. water polo team in 1984.

Reid was one of only four high school athletes to be picked for the Olympia Award at the last selection meeting. More than 500 college and high school athletes were screened by the committee.

"He was easily one of the outstanding athletes to come before our committee," said Rafer Johnson, chairman of the selection panel.

Johnson said the selectors were impressed not only with Reid's basketball exploits, but also with his sound academic record and with his leadership role at school and in the community.

"It's difficult for a high school player to win the Olympia Award in competition with the nation's best collegiate student-athletes," Rafer, said.

"But J.R. had the kind of all-around abilities and skills that our panel looks for."

Reid, who is headed for the University of North Carolina next month, received the award as a replica of a Panathenaic amphora, a two-handled Greek vase — at a luncheon recently. The presentation was made by Tom McLeod, operations manager for The Southland Corporation.

In each of his four seasons at Kempville, the 6-foot, 10-inch Reid was all-state, all-conference and all-league. He is a three-time high school All-American and was named the top high school basketball player in the Metropolitan Tidewater area.

Reid led Kempville in scoring and rebounding in all four seasons and was one of the most highly recruited high school players in America.

Reid was nominated for the Olympia Award a year ago by his coach, Joe Kempville, Richard Pont.

"For a young man, he has life's priorities well defined," Pont said.

Mayor Jones reports to CCO

$150 million a year, but the school board has asked for $143 million, and $360 million is needed for roads.

"That's just for essential things we need to get done," Jones said, "and we really haven't done anything splashy or nice that would put Virginia Beach on the map."

The plan will probably increase real estate taxes by 10 cents, Jones said. Diana Close, first vice president of CCO, asked if the increase would also lead to an increase in assessments on property. Jones said assessments could be frozen one year and increased the next to prevent a rapid increase.

Another civic council representative said he understood the need for raising taxes to improve roads, but he wanted to know why the city didn't work on roads that needed improvement now, instead of improving roads that do not have much traffic on them now.

Nancy Parker, a city council member attending the meeting, said the city is concentrating on an arterial system to relieve traffic problems on the present roads. She said some roads get funded automatically.

Preventing A Crisis
Another feat the city accomplished, according to Jones, is avoiding a crisis situation with the city water supply during the drought. But he said there is some concern by well owners in the Great Neck and Little Neck areas that the city is not monitoring their problems of dry wells and salt-water intrusion.

"I am satisfied that we are up to speed as to what we are able to do under the law," he said.

Mayor Robert Jones told civic league representatives the city has accomplished a great deal in the past two months.

The city is also sending out a survey to find out if any neighborhoods wish to be on the city water supply. "We're prioritizing those neighborhoods and we're working to get them on city water as soon as possible," Jones said.

Pinewood Gardens League representative Frank Chebatar asked how the Lake Gaston case is coming. Jones said it is in a stalemate right now, but the judge deciding the case may be making a decision in about six weeks.

Jones said he feels the judge will find that the Army Corps of Engineers did not act capriciously in allowing Virginia Beach to have access to Lake Gaston.

The Green Line
Another accomplishment of the council has been to begin to decide on a solution to the Green Line, according to Jones. He said he feels some of the areas zoned residential below the Green Line were mistakenly zoned.

The council is asking for a recommendation, whether to down zone or leave the areas residential, from the Planning Commission by Aug. 23. "Before the end of August, we're going to make that decision," Jones said.

Other Business
In other action, Kim Mackey asked the CCO to oppose a disclosure law allowing lawyers to look at court records of names, addresses, occupations and birthdays of jurors.

Mackey said she was a juror in a trial where the defendant represented himself. The defendant got the court records, and Mackey said she and several other jurors got non-threatening letters from the defendant, asking why they had convicted him.

"You're not being protected and you have no right," she said. She asked civic council members to inform league members about the law and work to eliminate it. No immediate action was taken on her request.

Toll-free number offered to drivers to report road hazards

Virginia Beach citizens can report highway maintenance or safety hazards to the Virginia Department of Highways and Transportation by dialing 1-800-376-ROAD.

"This new toll-free "Highway Helpline" makes the department more accessible and promotes a team effort with the public to keep Virginia's roads in the best shape possible," Commissioner Ray D. Pethel said. "Our top priority is to ensure the safety of the traveling public."

The helpline allows citizens to help the department keep track of changing conditions on the more than 54,000 miles of state-maintained roads in Virginia, including roads in Virginia Beach.

"Even with more than 10,000 employees in the Department, we can't be everywhere all the time," Pethel said. "By using the helpline, citizens can alert us to road problems that we're not always aware of."

Information received will be used to set priorities for maintenance and repair work.

Beamer gives his testimony on his faith

Beamer said his wife was plagued by the fear that when their son died, he had been alone in his hospital room. But he received a letter shortly after Billy died from a student nurse the family knew who was an active Christian. She wrote to say that she had been with Billy when he died.

Beamer credits God with putting the nurse in the room with Billy, so he wouldn't have to die alone.

He also said his bouts with painful arthritis disappeared when he turned the pain over to Christ, realizing that pain came from Satan.

Beamer told FGBMFI chapter members that they should read a chapter a day from the Bible. He compared the Bible to a filter in a person's life, that filters out all the bad and allows the good to flow through.

FGBMFI welcomes all faiths

According to Jerry Hoover, president of the Virginia Beach chapter, the chapter was formed about 12 years ago to give Christian businessmen a chance to get together, and to spread Christianity through business channels.

Hoover said the founder of the international organization,

Bill Beamer, international director for the Full Gospel Business Men's Fellowship International, gives his testimony to the Virginia Beach chapter. Photo by Stephanie Beyer.

Demos Shakarion, created the group as a way to reach out to Christian men. Shakarion noticed that many women attended church and Christian gatherings, but very few men did, according to Hoover.

He said the organization is not linked to any church. Men of all faiths are welcome to join.

The organization has had an increase in membership for the past two years, Hoover said. "Men are becoming more open about their commitment to Christ," he said.

Last year, the organization started a "SWAT team," where members of the group go out on invitation and pray for businessmen having problems.

The chapter has also become concerned about pornography. Vice President Mike Barnes encouraged chapter members to talk to store managers who carry pornographic magazines and write to Congressmen.

"We're going to do whatever we can to fight it," Hoover said. The international convention for the Full Gospel Business Men's Fellowship International will be held in Virginia Beach from Sept. 11 through Sept. 14 at the Pavilion Hotel.

City Officials Field Questions

School Board, Capital Improvement, Election Of Mayor Discussed At Council Of Civic Organizations Forum

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

Council of Civic Organizations representatives questioned Mayor Robert Jones, Vice Mayor Meyera Oberndorf and City Manager Thomas Muehlenbeck on the direct election of the school board, the capital improvement program and direct election of the mayor during a television forum recently.

Diana Close, first vice president for CCO, asked the officials how they felt about direct election of the school board.

"I would be very comfortable with a directly elected school board," Oberndorf said. She added she would also like to see the school board have taxing power, so the board would be directly responsible for expenditures.

Oberndorf said such a move would require a change in state legislation. She said she wants to first bring the change to the council's attention and get a unanimous decision.

George Hoffmeister, recording secretary for the CCO, wanted to know how the city will establish priorities to relieve the backlog of work needed on schools and roads under the capital improvement program.

Muehlenbeck said the city plans to do away with the backlog of schools in eight years and eliminate the backlog of roads in 10 years.

Jones added that one of the priorities for roads is to see "what will enhance traffic flow." Muehlenbeck said the city is trying to streamline the construction process, instead of jumping from phase to phase in projects all over the city. CCO President Rae LaSene asked about direct election of the mayor. The civic council passed a resolution last month calling for direct election of the mayor.

Oberndorf said in a recent day-long workshop, the council unanimously agreed to ask for a charter change in a November referendum. She said the council also agreed that any council member running for mayor in a general election would have to resign for a full term.

Oberndorf said the forum was a good way for the council to "create a dialogue with the community." She said not only could the public have their questions answered directly by city officials, but it allows council members to clarify how they stand on issues.

Expiration dates assigned to handicapped permits

As a result of legislation effective July 1, the Department of Motor Vehicles now assigns expiration dates to permanent handicapped parking permits, according to DMV Commissioner Donald E. Williams.

Permits issued after July 1 will expire five years from the issue date. Persons with permits issued prior to July 1 must renew the permits before June 30, 1988. In order to renew the permits, handicapped persons will be required to provide a doctor's certification.

Handicapped parking permits authorize parking for unlimited time periods in any metered or unmetered space during general parking hours, free parking in metered spaces, as well as parking in any space designated for handicapped persons.

The handicapped parking permits are valid when displayed in the front windshield on the driver's side of a vehicle while carrying the handicapped owner of the card. There is no charge for the permit, but a physician's certification is required.

"By requiring that handicapped drivers and passengers renew and recertify their parking permits every five years, DMV will help protect their privilege to use the permits," Williams said.

Handicapped parking permits will also include the handicapped person's birth date and sex as well as the person's name and permit expiration date.

"Law enforcement officers will be able to use the additional information to help determine if the handicapped person is in the vehicle," Williams said.

Handicapped parking permits, disabled driver parking permits, handicapped license plates and disabled veteran license plates are available to people with a permanent handicap that limits their mobility.

People with a temporary handicap—a mobility impairment certified by a physician and expected to last three to 12 months—can apply for a temporary handicapped parking permit or a disabled driver parking permit.

Council debates direct election of school board, bonds

suggested that the direct election of a school board be placed on the ballot to determine what the people want. She said that she had encountered dissatisfaction with the present system.

The Council appoints the School Board, but she said she wanted to find out whether there is a "groundswell feeling." She said that she has received calls, people are upset, and wanted "once and for all to settle the issue and to allow us to have that option."

Councilman John Moss said that the issue died in the General Assembly last year, but that all local legislators have supported elected school boards. He suggested that Council look at the experiences in other municipalities.

Councilman Robert Fentress said that Council should have all the facts together before a referendum is considered.

Parker said that interest in the change has been shown at Council of Civic Organization and other civic meetings. She pointed out that 48 states have the option.

Councilman John A. Baum said that the city has "a lot of good people you can appoint who will not run (for office). I've never seen elected representatives so anxious to shed responsibility."

"What we have now is not ideal; what we will get is not ideal. We don't get the best people on the School Board now," said Councilman John Perry. "A lot of silent people are more effective than the vocal ones."

Councilwoman Barbara Henley asked that a report prepared three years ago by a General Assembly subcommittee be studied.

Moss said that school boards are elected because they make important decisions on spending money. As it is, the appointed School Board does not have to justify expenses, he said, while elected officials have to raise the money. "If they (the school board) want to be independent, let them raise their own taxes," he said.

For his part, Mayor Robert G. Jones said that he has been impressed with the economies practiced by the School Board, particularly in regard to the small administrative component. He said, however, that a commission ought to look into all these things and that he would discuss the matter with the School Board as a possible agenda item for a joint meeting of Council and the Board.

"Something has to change," said Parker. "It can't stay the way it is."

Raising bonds

Councilman Harold Heischob proposed a referendum for increasing the city's bonding authority. That is, by increasing the limit on the amount the Council is permitted to borrow without the consent of the people in a referendum. The ceiling now is $10 million plus the amount of debt retired a year. The city has attempted for years, unsuccessfully, in its legislative proposals to the General Assembly, to win authorization for the charter change which would increase the borrowing limit.

Heischob maintained that the city has spent about $150 million more than it should have in building the city. He said the city should have been built on three or four percent money, instead of eight, nine and ten percent money. The city could have done this if it had the authority to issue more charter bonds, he said.

Councilman Robert Fentress concurred; he said that an increase in the charter bonds is the only way to provide the projects the city needs.

Councilman John Moss said that he could not support any increase in the city's indebtedness. Any additional indebtedness, he said, means a tax increase.

Heischob likened Moss' attitude to, "we're the manager of the city but don't intend to manage."

He said that the bond authority would be designed for the same priorities selected by the Council—schools and public safety.

Both the school board and bonding authority issues are of considerable importance to the city, Jones said. He suggested that he, Vice Mayor Meyera Oberndorf and City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck look at the indebtedness question.

The resolution on the direct election of mayor calls for the first election of mayor to be in 1988 along with the council election. The mayor's term would run four years.

The mayor would run for one of the four at-large Council seats.

If a Council member other than the mayor decides to run for mayor during his term of office, he will be required to tender his resignation as a councilman not less than ten days prior to the date for the filing of petitions. This will give potential candidates time to file for the seat the mayoral candidate is vacating. The mayoral candidate will continue his term until June 30, however.

The vice mayor would be elected at the organizational meeting of the new Council on July 1.

Sept. 4 is the deadline for having the referendum questions in the Registrar's Office so that they can be placed on the November Ballot. Council's last meeting before that is the special meeting on Thursday, Aug. 28.

First Class Radioman Vendetta Williamson verifies outgoing message traffic in her position as outgoing message traffic checker for the Naval Air Station Oceana Communication's Department.

Navy Woman Meets Challenges

By Annette Hall
 Special To The Sun

"My husband thinks everything I touch turns to gold," says First Class Radioman Vendetta Williamson, recently selected as Naval Air Station Oceana "Sailor of the Quarter."

At 32, Williamson has developed the confidence, self-assurance and ability to meet any situation. "I met the board head-on," Williamson said of the panel of chief petty officers who interviewed candidates for the title. "You cannot be intimidated, because much of the interview is to see how confident you are in yourself. Meet a challenge with confidence and give it your best shot."

The first class radioman is the outgoing traffic checker for the station's Communications Center. She checks all messages sent out, looking for errors. "When I find errors, I have to send out a memo of explanation to the originator," Williamson said. She is also the center's Substance Abuse Coordinator.

Working to build his career as a radioman, Williamson likes the job security. She also likes meeting different people and gaining experience in management as a supervisor.

"It gives you a feel for the way other people think and to deal with different people and their personalities," she said.

Williamson, who had a one-year break in her 12-year Navy career, did not intend to make the military a career. However, during the year back in the line, she realized that returning to the military was the best way to further her education.

She recently received her Associate of Arts degree from St. Louis College. "There's no stopping now," says Williamson.

She is again enrolled in the college, planning to earn her bachelor's degree in sociology. The Navy pays 90 percent of her schooling through the tuition aid program.

"I love going to school; it keeps my mind stimulated—and it keeps me out of trouble," Williamson said.

She chose sociology as her major because she is interested in working with battered wives and against violence in the home. She is especially interested in helping the homeless.

"I want to do something so that at the end of the day I am fulfilled," she said.

She has applied to the City of Norfolk to work as a volunteer as either a tutor or a "Big Sister."

Williamson's husband David, a civilian employed locally, is supportive of her naval career. She has served in Florida, Puerto Rico, Cuba and Tidewater.

As the "Sailor of the Quarter," Williamson receives a station plaque, a $50 savings bond donated by Sovran Bank, two tickets to Busch Gardens, dinner for two at the Red Lobster, dinner for two at the Voyager Enlisted Club, and a luncheon at the enlisted club with NAS Oceana Commanding Officer, Captain J.E. Allen and Command Master Chief Lawrence Ervin.

Plan could cost $10 million a mile

By Lee Cahill
 City Council Reporter

The projects on the city's proposed Master Street and Highway Plan have a $700 million price tag—not counting the Southeastern Expressway.

The expressway would cost about $10 million a mile for the 17 miles of road spanning Virginia Beach and Chesapeake. Eight miles are in Chesapeake. But chances are that the Expressway will be a toll facility.

The Expressway, however, would have a head start if residents in two areas of the city had their way. They don't want the road widening scheduled for their communities and suggested the money be applied to the Expressway.

Residents of the South Plaza Trail and Centerville Turnpike areas told Council Monday afternoon that they don't want their roads widened. The money, $7 million for South Plaza Trail and $8 million for Centerville Turnpike, would be better spent they said, on the Expressway.

Already eliminated from consideration in the Plan at the request of residents are the expansion of Old Donational Parkway and the continuation of Baxter Road to Churchhill Drive. The plan was recommended by Herland Bartholomew and Associates with changes by the city's planning staff. Council will vote on the plan, which is designed to meet the city's needs road needs to the year 2010, next Monday.

According to Planning Director Robert Scott, if improvements are made at the present rate, the city will have enough money for only half of the projects.

A $40 million road referendum has been proposed for six of the projects.

Scott said that the plan includes three features—the city's policies, new roadway locations, and collector systems, which will not be in place until the arterial roads are decided upon.

He said that few changes are located in the areas north of Virginia Beach Boulevard. The Expressway is located east, rather than west, of Oceana, a major highlight of the plan. The plan, he said, requires more money than is now being spent on roads.

Planning engineer Bill Cashman said that the Eastern Expressway route will serve the greater number of people. If the expressway is a toll road, it is important to pick a route with the greatest number of people. The difference is between a projected volume of 30,000 to 35,000 cars a day on the western route by 2005, similar to the capacity of Kempsville Road, and 58,000 vehicles a day on the eastern route.

The reasons for the added volume, he said, is the incorporation of Oceana and the development of Hilltop as a major commercial area.

One of the attractive features of the Expressway is the absence of development along the route except for the area around Oceana.

A public hearing on the Expressway will be scheduled at a school, Mayor Robert G. Jones said.

Judith G. Marchand objected to the widening of South Plaza Trail from two lanes to a four-lane divided roadway. She said she did not see where "our little stretch aids anyone."

Charles R. Pedrick said the widening would lead to a degradation of the community.

The only reason for the widening, he said, is to get people south of his community to Virginia Beach Boulevard. The provision is unnecessary, he said, because the services are being developed in communities. The city may be wasting $7 million, he said, which "may be better spent on the expressway."

Pedrick submitted a petition signed by 1,775 residents in opposition to the widening.

Residents do not oppose the extension of South Plaza Trail to the intersection of Providence and Princess Anne roads.

Patrick O'Keefe of Windsor Woods said the widening would be a mistake because it would divide the community, cut yards, endanger children and generate noise. He said the road would come within a few feet of his bedroom.

"Tranquility is more important," he said, "than the few minutes Mr. and Mrs. John Doe will save." He said that "there is no problem on South Plaza Trail now and there will not be a problem unless you make it."

Ernest R. Clabaugh, also of Windsor Woods, said that the road was designed as a feeder road and not as a main conduit for north-south traffic.

Thomas A. Curran, president of the Lake James Association, opposed the relocation and expansion of Centerville Turnpike from a two-lane to a four-lane road. He said the road would be 30 to 40 feet from his property.

He charged that the road was being built for CBN because CBN (Christian Broadcasting Network and CBN University) will be the only beneficiary. He said he is not against CBN but disagrees that a non-profit organization will benefit more than the taxpayers. He pointed out that CBN has property on both sides of the Turnpike.

The $8 million can be better spent, he said, on another mile of the Southeastern Expressway.

John P. Garland of South Plaza Trail said he did not see where the traffic would be coming from.

George DeLano, with the Larkspur Civic League, said that he was against the widening of any existing road through any established neighborhood. He said the extension of Providence Road to connect with some point near Independence will not impact South Plaza Trail. He said he agreed with Clabaugh that the money would be better spent on other roads such as Ferrell Parkway and Lynnhaven Parkway.

He said he wanted to see Baxter Road extended to Churchill.

Councilwoman Reba McClanahan said that she would make a motion to delete South Plaza Trail from the plan when Council voted on the plan.

Full Gospel Businessmen

Vision: Leaders meet at CBN to discuss new Gospel chapter

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

Presidents from the Virginia Beach, Portsmouth and Norfolk chapters of the Full Gospel Businessmen's Fellowship International held a special meeting at CBN University recently to discuss steps toward unifying the chapters and to support the founding of a new chapter in Chesapeake.

Richard Reynolds, president of the Norfolk chapter, said a meeting of all the chapter presidents at the state convention on Sept. 12 in Virginia Beach could "break down the barriers between individual chapters and bring back to the unity of the

Reynolds said all the chapters used to be just one massive chapter before some splintered off to serve individual communities.

Bob Harvey, international director for FGBMFI, said the organization also used to hold a regional breakfast four times a year. "Hopefully, we can get back to that very soon to promote chapter unity," he said.

The presidents also discussed coordinating chapter meetings so that one speaker could speak at several chapter meetings in one weekend.

Harvey suggested that the Portsmouth members could attend the "men only" meetings in Virginia Beach.

Increased community newspaper coverage was also discussed. Portsmouth president John Short said his chapter began coverage six months ago in The Portsmouth Times, and it has been successful in helping to increase membership in his chapter. CBN University Director of the Institute of Journalism, Clifford Kelly, asked for the support of the chapter presidents in starting a new chapter in Chesapeake.

Reynolds said the potential for establishing a chapter in Chesapeake is good. Other chapter presidents agreed to help start the new chapter in any way they could.

"All you need is a few good men who have the vision and things will come together very quickly," Harvey said.

Kelly said in an interview that the meeting was a breakthrough in getting the chapter presidents together to try and work as a team.

Kelly said he was encouraged by the support offered by the other chapters. So far, prospects look good for starting the chapter, which floundered after it first formed in 1980.

The oldest chapter is the Norfolk chapter, which began in 1963, according to Reynolds. He said businessmen who attended a FGBMFI convention in Washington, D.C. were so enthusiastic about the organization they started their own chapter.

Reynolds said the chapter has an equal mix of blacks and whites. "We're not closed to any race, creed or religion," he said.

The chapter sponsors a hotline for southeast Virginia, referring people to local chapters. It also has a ministry to the Navy prison. Meetings are held the first Saturday of every month at 9 a.m. at the Lake Wright Motel.

John Short, president of the Portsmouth chapter, said his chapter started as a local offshoot of the Norfolk chapter in 1974.

Short said his chapter is stressing membership. In fact, he said membership has almost doubled in the past six months. "We're trying to reach as many businessmen and professionals as we can," he said.

The Portsmouth chapter meets on the third Saturday of each month at the Holiday Inn Waterfront.

In 1974, the Virginia Beach chapter was formed, also as a branch of the original Norfolk chapter.

Jerry Hoover, president of the chapter, said they began a "SWAT team" last year to go out on invitation and pray for businessmen in trouble.

In addition, Hoover said the chapter is going to begin a fight against pornography being sold in local grocery stores and bookstores.

MDA events for Labor Day

The Muscular Dystrophy Association is planning parties and fundraisers for Labor Day weekend in Virginia Beach.

On Sunday August 31, a lawn party, featuring the modern rock band "Wild Kingdom," will take place on the Pavilion Tower Hotel sundeck from 4 to 8 p.m.

On Monday, Sept. 1, a family ice cream social will be held in the hotel lobby from 2 to 6:30 p.m. Ice cream will be served free to anyone making a donation to the MDA.

From 7 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. on Monday, a local radio personality will be sitting in a jacuzzi outside the hotel. The public is invited to drive through and make a donation to the MDA in a second jacuzzi.

Downzoning recommendation praised, attacked

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

A recent recommendation to the Virginia Beach City Council by the Planning Commission to avoid downzoning south of the Green Line has been praised by some groups and condemned by others.

"I hope the city council will take a different approach," Harry Luman, president of the Citizen's Action Coalition said. During a public hearing on the issue, Luman said the only good reason to downzone "is simply an individual or corporate desire to make money."

He said in a telephone interview, however, that those who already have land zoned as residential or business could be "grandfathered" and the city could downzone all the other areas.

James Dobbins, executive director for the Hampton Roads Chamber of Commerce in Virginia Beach, said he was happy about the commission's recommendation. He said downzoning is not required to control overdevelopment, but hopes that the planning commission will develop a system of planned growth for the area.

"We believe downzoning takes away the right of the property owner to use property as they want to." —Barbara Wolcott, Tidewater Board of Realtors.

Rae Le Sesne, president of the Council of Civic Organizations, said he still believes downzoning is essential for the future of the city. "I'm disappointed in the vote," he said.

But many who spoke at the public hearing said they felt downzoning would take away their rights.

"We believe that downzoning takes away the right of the property owner to use property as they want to," Barbara Wolcott of the Tidewater Board of Realtors said.

"I feel like you are really cutting me off at the knees," Barbara Kiehl, a property owner in Princess Anne said.

Maxine Graham, a property owner in Sandbridge, said downzoning would destroy an investment she and her husband made so they would have someplace to retire.

"You make a mockery of the system when people parade in here and apply for rezoning and then you can take it away," she said.

John Boon, a representative from the Hampton Roads Chamber of Commerce, said the threat of downzoning has already caused land values in the north to artificially inflate. He said downzoning may not be necessary to stall growth if "a firm land-use plan is put into place."

However, Jim Clark, a life-long resident of Back Bay, has noticed that fishing and recreation in Back Bay has almost been ruined by development on the watershed. He said development has been a nightmare for the local environment.

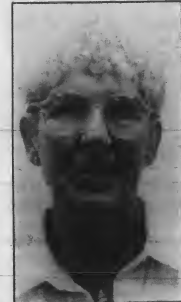

The city council will have made a decision on the recommendation by Tuesday, August 26.

Weight loss motivated 60-year-old runner

By Stephanie Beyer
Staff Writer

A desire to lose weight started a 60-year-old Virginia Beach elementary school teacher on the path to a three-year running hobby.

"The one thing that really got me going is I was really overweight," Marge Brown said.

At about the same time, her sister-in-law was very sick, and Brown said she only survived because she was in good shape. In addition, her husband, Al, was in the hospital with his second heart attack, so she realized good health was important.

Brown said she started walking around the two blocks close to her Birchwood Gardens home.

She said it was a chore to walk, so she began jogging for a block or so.

Her first race was the Sand Run, sponsored by the Shamrock Club, where she came in second in her age group. She said she decided it was so much fun, she would run more races.

Since then, she has run about 15 races a year. In addition, she lost about 45 pounds over the course of a year and a half. A back problem that used to cause her to miss several days of school at Kingsline Elementary hasn't bothered her since she started running, she said.

"It's really been very beneficial, physically and mentally," she said. "I feel as well physically as I did when I was 40, if not more so."

Brown has been a member of the Tidewater Striders for three years. She said she first found out about the Striders when her elementary school held an "All-American Run."

She said runners in Virginia Beach are very fortunate to have such a good running club in the area. The races sponsored by the club are handled efficiently and times are given to runners quickly and accurately, according to Brown.

"I've never met anyone in the Striders who wasn't helpful and supportive," she said. Brown said she runs every Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday morning, and anywhere from 10 to 18 miles a week.

Council approves referendum issues

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

Referenda questions were approved by City Council Monday evening pretty much as proposed despite efforts to remove two projects from the referendum package.

The $38.31 million referenda will go before the people Nov. 4, an increase of $6.17 million over recommendation to include a sixth school, Ocean Lakes Elementary, in the program.

To avoid possible defeat of two projects at the polls, some Council members attempted to have them dropped from the ballot—the Juvenile and Domestic Relations Court Building ($6.5 million) and the Virginia Beach Community Center, Great Neck ($9.5 million).

Albert Balko, Lynnhaven Borough Councilman, wanted to remove the Community Center, which would be in his borough, and use charter bonds to build the facility.

"There is a possibility it will not pass the referendum," he said. That would leave the com-

Car pool lanes designated for Highway 44

Hours for certain vehicles to use the new high occupancy vehicle lanes on the Virginia Beach-Norfolk Expressway were set recently by the State Highway and Transportation Board.

The first segment of the lanes, from just east of Interstate 64 to the expressway's toll plaza, is scheduled to open in mid-September.

After the opening, only emergency vehicles, buses and vehicles carrying three or more persons will be allowed to use the westbound lane Monday through Friday between 6 a.m. and 9 a.m., and the eastbound lane between 3 p.m. and 6 p.m. The lanes are open to all vehicles at other times.

When complete, the lanes will extend eastbound between Interstate 64 in Norfolk and Laskin Road in Virginia Beach, and westbound between Laskin Road and Witcluck Road in Virginia Beach.

The new lanes have been added to encourage commuters to use carpools, vanpools and buses in an effort to ease congestion during morning and evening rush hours.

Editorials

Election of school board a good idea

Out of 48 states, only Virginia and one other state are the only ones that appoint school boards. Right now, Virginia Beach City Council is considering placing direct election of the school board on the November referendum.

Councilwoman Nancy Parker said at a recent council workshop that she has heard many complaints about the present system.

In addition, council members and citizens have said that since the school board spends taxpayer dollars, the board should be directly responsible to the taxpayers.

However, during the council workshop, Councilman John Baum said electing a school board is not always a guarantee that there will be good members on the board. He said sometimes, people who would work well in the system might not want to run for office.

It is surprising that Virginia Beach, with its high priority on quality education, does not elect its school board. It is harder for an appointed board to be held responsible for decisions involving taxpayer funds, students, and parents.

There is also a danger of an elected school board becoming more interested in cultivating a favorable public opinion than working on the "nitty-gritty" education issues.

In spite of those problems, it is surprising that Virginia Beach, with its high priority on quality education, does not elect its school board. It is harder for an appointed board to be held responsible for decisions involving taxpayer funds, students and parents.

However, the city council may be hasty in trying to put the issue on the referendum in November.

Last year, a similar plan to change the state charter so Virginia school boards could be directly elected did not get through the General Assembly.

By taking some time and working with the school board, the council could develop a plan to gradually phase in the direct election of the school board. Then, the issue could go to the public through a special referendum, if necessary, and be presented to state government with a better chance of passage.

At any rate, quality education in Virginia Beach can only be furthered by allowing direct election of the school board.—S.M.B.

Voter registration

Starting August 27, the City of Virginia Beach will be holding voter registration drives throughout the city.

This November, it will be especially important for Virginia Beach voters to get registered and vote. Not only will voters have a chance to elect city officials, but will be voting on two referendums that could lead to major changes in city government.

The city council recently approved placing the issue of direct election of the mayor on the referendum. If approved, the city will ask the state for a charter change.

This November will be especially important for Virginia Beach voters to get registered and vote. Not only will voters have a chance to elect city officials, but will be voting on two referendums that could lead to major changes in city government.

Another referendum will ask voters to begin the first phase of the city's catch-up plan for schools, roads, public safety and special projects. The November referendum will be asking for approximately $40 million in bonds for roads and about $27 million in bonds for schools.

Voters can register from 8:30 to 10 a.m. at the Virginia Beach Pavilion on Wednesday, August 27. Two more registration drives will be held at the Lynnhaven Mall and Pembroke Mall on Friday, Sept. 6 from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Naval personnel can get transportation to a drive sponsored by the Ladies Auxiliary Fleet Reserve Association on Saturday, August 30 at 4060 Military Highway.—S.M.B.

Amendments concern right to vote

Editor:

Contrary to what most voters believe, there is a statewide election in Virginia this year—not for candidates, but for important constitutional amendments.

Two of these amendments concern the fundamental right to vote. The first would permit any registered voter who has not voted in four years to continue to be registered, if the individual so requests in writing and still lives at the same address.

Currently, any voter who has not voted in four consecutive years—even for illness or other compelling reasons—is automatically purged from the voting rolls and cannot vote again until he or she makes another trip to the local registrar to re-register at least a month prior to any regular election.

Make no mistake: voters should cast a ballot in every election, but the fact is that relatively few do so. In the 1985 governor's contest, for instance, less than a third (32.2 percent) of Virginia's eligible population went to the polls.

We have trouble enough getting decent turnouts without automatically purging people from the voting lists, thus making it even more likely that these individuals will permanently be spectators instead of participants.

Granted, most individuals who are purged are either deceased or have moved, but thousands of others have simply not voted. Instead of consigning them to the sidelines, let's keep them on the rolls and redouble our efforts to involve them in politics.

The second constitutional amendment would permit government employees—except those who are elected or who are employed by an elected official—to be appointed assistant voter registrars. Such an arrangement could allow for voter registration at any Division of Motor Vehicles for instance, so that individuals securing or renewing an automobile license could simultaneously and conveniently register to vote as well.

This approach has worked well in the states that already permit it, and tens of thousands of new voters have been signed up as a result. It should be stressed that this is not a partisan measure; both the Democratic and Republican parties in Virginia have proven well able to conduct extensive voter registration activities in recent years, and this amendment could provide assistance and additional opportunities for their registration efforts.

In recent years, much attention has been focused on the abysmally low level of voter registration and turnout in the United States, which is last in both categories among major Western democracies.

Despite the valiant efforts of the State Board of Elections and many local registrars, Virginia is even further behind, below the pitiful U.S. average in both registration and turnout.

The two constitutional amendments concerning voting that are on the November ballot deserve passage, because they offer moderate, reasonable, nonpartisan remedies to the serious problem of political nonparticipation in our society.

These amendments, passed overwhelmingly by two separate sessions of the General Assembly, are hardly a complete solution, but they are two steps in the right direction.

Beach Education Association welcomes new teachers

LET'S TALK

By Rob Jones, president,
Virginia Beach Education Association

In this week's "Let's Talk," I share with you the welcome remarks I delivered to the more than 230 new teachers. Hopefully these remarks will offer insight about the VBSEA program and how we help new teachers. Please join us in welcoming the new teachers to our system.

As president of the Virginia Beach Education Association, I welcome you to one of the finest educational systems in this country. I thank Dr. Brickell and Mrs. Cassida for affording me this opportunity to greet you on behalf of the over 2,400 members of the Virginia Beach Education Association.

We invite you to share our pride in our school system. We invite you to join your professional association.

National Education Association President and Virginian, Mary Hatwood Futrell, tells a story I love about riding to town in her grandfather's carriage. As she and her grandfather rode along, a horsefly landed on the rear of the mule pulling the wagon. Her grandfather quickly seized his whip, and with great expertise, he ended the life of the fly without disturbing the mule.

Just then, a rattlesnake appeared at the mule's feet, and Mary warned, "Granddaddy, a snake!" Again the old man grabbed his whip, this time separating the snake's head from his body with a single snap of the whip.

Finally, a bee landed on the mule's ear. The old man just commented on the bee and his whip rested at his side. Mary asked, "Granddaddy, why don't you kill that bee?" Mary's grandfather pointed to the hive in the tree above and said, "You don't mess with those bees. They are organized."

The VBSEA is organized as an affiliate organization of the 1.8 million member National Education Association and the 43,000 member Virginia Education Association.

These three levels of the United Education Profession effectively advocate on behalf of educators on the local, state and national levels. I'll attempt to delineate how each of the three levels will most directly impact upon your professional lives.

The NEA provides one million dollar tort liability coverage for all members, lobbies for federal programs and funding - including the impact aide which greatly impacts on our local budget - and works on the national level to improve the status of teaching. Most recently, NEA President Mary Futrell, through her work on the Carnegie Commission, has begun championing the concept of a national board for professional teaching standards.

This exciting concept, long supported by Virginia's teachers, would elevate the profession of teaching by providing that teachers control their profession as doctors and lawyers do.

A national certificate would eliminate many of the problems relating to certification that many of you who have come from other states have faced, and a proposed goal of the national board is the transfer of retirement benefits from state to state. Other examples of how NEA is working for you are numerous.

The VEA provides funding for teacher rights protection, effective lobbying in Richmond - where everything from how many teaching positions per one thousand students will be funded, to when school will begin is decided - and provides excellent professional staff to support our local efforts.

VEA's director of the Division of Communications, Joe Bland, who has twice won the nation's top advertising award, is beginning an exciting new public relations campaign with the theme, "If you think the 18th century was Virginia's most spectacular, you're looking in the wrong direction."

The goal is to gain support for educating the Virginians of the 21st century who are in our classes today. The Virginia Education Association is among the top state level organizations in the nation.

Locally, the Virginia Beach Education Association, the second largest education association in Virginia, serves you in ways ranging from representing teachers, aides, nurses, audiologists, and psychologists at the meet-and-confer table - where we strive to improve salaries, benefits, and general conditions of employment - to gaining you discounts on your next set of tires.

We constantly strive to improve the quality of instruction in our classrooms, and the VBSEA Instructional and Professional Development Committee has won the President's Award for instructional excellence for three years in a row. We have two directors, two secretaries, and myself who will be ever willing to assist you.

The VBSEA representative in your building will be bringing a "Welcome to Teaching" packet to each of you. If you don't get one next week, please call my office and I'll make sure you get one. This packet includes everything from an "I teach at the Beach" bumper sticker to a list of 13 ways to beat the "first day jitters." I feel confident that the packet will prove to be useful.

help you survive Virginia's beginning teacher assistance program, BTAP, and an announcement.

When I first examined the program as it was being developed, I thought BTAP stood for Beginning Teacher Assistance Program. Passing BTAP has become more difficult this year last, because the number of areas in which a new teacher must demonstrate competence has been increased from 10 required last year to 12. There has been talk of increasing the number to 14.

We invite you to attend our BTAP Workshop on Wednesday, Sept. 24, from 4 to 8:30 p.m. at the Ramada Inn, Newtown Road.

This workshop will include tips from teachers involved in BTAP last year and valuable information to help you pass BTAP this year.

We have arranged for the Virginia Beach Registrar, Marlene Hagar, to register newcomers to the area and people who may have moved to a different precinct this coming Wednesday at the convocation. Look for the registration tables in the lobby of Pavilion. We thank Dr. Brickell for his cooperation in this matter.

In light of the fact that we have a school bond referendum on the ballot in November and a Congressional Election, it is important that all educators be properly registered.

VBSEA welcomes you. Your rep will be greeting you. Good luck. We hope you will share our pride in the quality of this school system and our dedication to make it even better. Thank you.

Motorists must stop for school bus unloading or loading

When school opens Sept. 2, Virginia Beach motorists should be aware of their responsibilities when meeting a school bus on the city's highways and streets.

State law requires motorists to stop when encountering a school bus loading or unloading students, under the following circumstances:

At intersections, all drivers must come to a complete stop. Failure to stop for a stopped school bus with lights flashing at an intersection is a frequent violation, since some motorists don't realize they are required to stop even when approaching a school bus at right angles.

On undivided highways or streets, all vehicles are required by law to stop and remain so until all children are clear of the roadway and the bus is in motion.

On divided highways or streets,

After school program set

The Boys Club of Virginia Beach, 4441 South Blvd., near Mt. Trashmore, is announcing an "After School Fun Time" program for six weeks at the following schools: Windsor Woods, Windsor Oaks, Kempsville Meadows, Providence Elementary, Green Run Elementary and Rosemont Elementary.

Call the Boys Club at 499-2311.

Members say professional life enhanced by VBSEA

This is the fifth in a series of articles on the Virginia Beach Education Association.

For a total of 16 years, a high school counselor and a third grade teacher have been members and representatives of the Virginia Beach Education Association.

Norma Brumage, a counselor at Green Run High School, has been a member of VBSEA for 14 years. She said she joined mainly because as a professional, she felt it was important to belong to a professional organization.

"I cannot perceive of any teacher not being a member of VBSEA," she said.

Karen Clarke, a third grade teacher at Linkhorn Elementary School, has been a member for two years. Clarke's primary reason for joining was because she felt teachers would not have pay increases and other benefits without the VBSEA representing them.

Clarke added that she also joined because of the liability insurance provided through the VBSEA, especially in this day and age when people are suing each other."

Both Brumage and Clarke consider the association to be a professional and personal support system. "It's nice to know if you need someone, he or she is there for you," Brumage said.

She said some of the programs offered by the VBSEA have

"Teachers, teachers' aides, nurses, counselors and itinerant people need to have an organization that makes us a unit. The VBSEA does this. It allows us to do some bonding as professionals."—Norma Brumage, VBSEA member enhanced her growth as a professional. Clarke added that it has also done a lot of teacher motivation and recognition.

"Teachers, teachers' aides, nurses, counselors and itinerant people need to have an organization that makes us a unit," Brumage said. "The VBSEA does this. It allows us to do some bonding as professionals."

The VBSEA also keeps treatment of personnel consistent between schools, according to Clarke.

But Brumage said there are some changes she would like to see made. She said she would like to have a larger membership and more visibility in the media and in the community. Brumage would also like to have more time to express to new teachers and non-members the value of belonging to the VBSEA.

Clarke said it sometimes angers her when some teachers say they are already receiving benefits as an excuse not to join VBSEA.

As a representative, Brumage said she talks to teachers about VBSEA, offers support, and tries to make herself available to deal with teacher concerns.

VBSEA President Rob Jones told a group of representatives at a meeting recently that they were the most important people in the organization. He said without them, communication between teachers and the VBSEA would be impossible.

Huge summer rally vulnerable to profit-taking

Wall Street The Week Ahead

By George T. Stagg

Wall Street moves into the final week of summer vacation, trying to keep the August rally intact. The final week approaching the long Labor Day weekend could be a two-sided affair.

However, we learn from "The Stock Trader's Almanac" that in the last 24 years, the market has shown advances 20 times during the three days prior to Labor Day.

But the market is currently over-bought and very vulnerable to some profit-taking by short term investors at these levels. The Dow Jones Industrial Average closed last week at 1888, up 150 points from its August 4 low. The most recent stimulus for the market took place last week when the Federal Reserve lowered the discount rate for the fourth time this year, bringing the rate to 5 1/4 percent.

Although advancing issues continue to exceed declining issues and the DOW continues its rally, there remains concern on the part of investors because the preceding cuts in interest rates, have failed to stimulate the overall economy.

This week, we anticipate that most major money center banks will follow the Fed's lead and cut the prime interest rate another half point to 7 1/4 percent.

It is then a question of waiting for new developments in the economy to see if lower rates are starting to work.

There are a few important economic releases this week, which we will be watching with interest. We expect the leading indicators numbers, which will be released Thursday, to be below consensus estimates projecting an increase of .7 percent. We anticipate about half that figure.

New home sales, to be released on Friday, are expected to remain at current levels. Although mortgage rates are down, home prices are rising - in some areas at double-digit rates - and this should keep sales rates modest. Also on Friday, merchandise trade figures for July will be released. We expect the merchandise trade deficit to widen to about $15 billion.

Labor Day weekend signals the end of summer and reminds me of the group of spirits knocking at the "pearly gates."

inquired of the first applicant. "It's me," a voice replied, and St. Peter bade her enter.

Another knock. Another question. "Who's there?" Another answer, "It's me."

Finally there came a sharp rap. "Who's there?" demanded St. Peter. "It is I," a voice replied.

"Another one of those school teachers!" grinned St. Peter.

She usually runs with Sandy Meyers, a teacher at the Center for Effective Learning. Brown said running with Meyers has helped improve her time and has given her an incentive to go out and run, even when it is hot.

Her two sons and daughter have also become healthier because of her hobby, she said. Her son Allan ran the "Marine" marathon last year, her son Robert runs in San Diego and her daughter bicycles with her husband.

But Brown said they really didn't get started until she started running seriously.

Brown calls her husband her "non-running coach." He en-

"It's really been very beneficial, physically and mentally. I feel as well physically as I did when I was 40, if not more so." Marge Brown, 60-year-old runner.

couraged her to keep a journal of her progress when she first started out and attends almost every one of her races. She said it would be impossible for her to run without his support.

Brown said she and her running partner are hoping to tackle the Northwest River Run races, a series of four races that lead up to the Shamrock marathon in December.

Right now, Brown said she is not planning on running a marathon because her teaching job doesn't allow much time for training. But once she retires, she said she might decide to run one.

Brown said she has no intention of giving running up. "I feel that I could go on forever," she said.

Fire potential lurking in attics, garages

Fire Safety
By Martin Grube
Master Fire Fighter

When was the last time you cleaned out your attic or your garage? You could very well have a time bomb just waiting to go off.

With the high temperatures we are having this summer, all those boxes in your attic could spontaneously combust into a fire, if your attic is not ventilated by means of fans or louvers. Temperatures can exceed 120 degrees.

Try to clean out your attic and get rid of as much as possible for a fire could very well begin and go undetected until it's too late.

Garages are another area that people take for granted. They store gas cans next to the water heater, leave paint brushes soaking in turpentine and throw everything in the garage that they can't get in their closets.

Firefighters in Virginia Beach encounter these problems all the time. A garage fire is very dangerous to firefighters for they do not know what the homeowner has stored inside. We have seen people actually build airplanes in their garage.

Some of the attic fires we fight are just as deadly. Hundreds of pounds of weight are stored up above your head. When the rafters become exposed to fire, they weaken and all that weight comes down on the firefighters who are already inside, searching for victims or trying to put the fire out.

Think about it. You can do us both a favor. Remove the fire hazard from your houses. If you would like a pamphlet on fire safety, drop by any fire house in Virginia Beach and ask for one.

Owning pets beneficial to seniors

The Virginia Beach Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, the Norfolk SPCA, and the Purina Pets for People program are offering senior citizens free dogs and cats.

Carol Kolback, executive director of the Virginia Beach SPCA, said seniors often find the companionship of an animal very healthy.

"The dog or cat a senior adopts brings a great deal of love and warmth into the lives of seniors—or anyone for that matter. The Purina Pets for People Program provides a way for seniors to adopt a pet free of charge—and that's a great help to many seniors," she said.

Recent scientific studies have shown the addition of a pet into the home of a senior citizen will often benefit the senior, both mentally and physically. The pets offer a healthy dose of companionship, which helps to reduce stress and even lowers blood pressure.

Corn earworm attacking local soybean crop

Corn earworm infestations are hitting Virginia Beach soybeans hard this season due to a late bean crop and the early drying of field corn brought on by high temperatures. A heavy infestation of corn earworm can destroy 80 percent of soybean yields if left untreated.

The corn earworm moths prefer to lay their eggs on green corn, but as the corn dries down, one of the favorite egg-laying sites for the moth becomes soybean fields. Because much of the corn acreage is maturing early or simply drying up due to dry conditions, and because soybean acres were planted late and are still green in much of the region this season, the soybean crop has been the prime target for corn earworm attack.

Some entomologists say Virginia Beach soybeans could encounter a second moth flight of the pest. Larvae are now pupating, or will soon pupate, and possibly give rise to even larger populations of egg-laying moths by Labor Day.

Chemical Control

A recent report on corn earworm control in sweet corn by University of Maryland Extension Entomologists states that some pyrethroid insecticides have reduced insecticidal activity during periods of high temperatures. The report points out, however, that Pydrin, methomyl (Nudrin or Lannate), Pennap-M and Lorsban are recommended chemicals for corn earworm control because these insecticides do not decrease in effectiveness during hot weather.

A heavy infestation of corn earworm can destroy 80 percent of soybean yields if left untreated.

4-H livestock club seeking new members

The Virginia Beach 4-H Livestock Club is seeking new members and volunteer leaders as it reorganizes for the 1986-87 year.

The 4-H Livestock Club's focus is on food animal production projects. Many members exhibit their steers, lambs, and hogs at the Virginia Beach/Chesapeake 4-H Livestock Show, held each May.

Livestock Club members also may participate in other 4-H projects, including meat, livestock, soils, and consumer judging, creative and performing arts, photography, shooting safety, electrical energy, wildlife, and veterinary science.

The Livestock Club is open to any boy or girl from any Virginia Beach neighborhood.

"Last year, members lived near the North Carolina line, in urban Kempville and everywhere between," said Extension Agent Tom Baker, who works closely with the club. "The Livestock Club is one of the largest and most active 4-H groups in the city."

Call the 4-H office at 427-4769, or Robbie Vaughan, club president, at 426-2040.

Coast Guard warns against unlicensed boats

The Coast Guard recently uncovered evidence that local boats are hiring themselves out to the public for day fishing trips—boats that are not licensed, inspected or outfitted with minimal safety equipment. The Coast Guard's concern is that these boats may pose a serious safety hazard to the passengers that they are carrying.

How serious is the risk? Local Coast Guard records are full of uninspected commercial vessel casualties involving groundings, sinkings, fires, flooding, collisions, capsizing, disappearances, and explosions, many of which involve deaths and injuries.

While the Coast Guard continues to work with maritime interests to improve safety, they are also working toward preventing illegal passenger-carrying fishing boats from operating.

Why does the average person place himself at risk to catch fish on an illegally-operated boat? Some of the passengers knowingly do it because the illegal boats charge a lower daily fee than the local charter fishing boats. Other passengers are not aware of what is required and innocently book themselves on a day fishing trip on board an illegally-operated boat.

How can the public protect themselves when they want to go fishing out of a busy waterfront teeming with fishing boats? When they go on board the boat, they should see or should ask to see these things:

•The operator's license. The legal operator who carries passengers for hire must post a Coast Guard license. It will usually be posted near the helm.

•The boat's inspection certificate. If the boat carries more than six passengers, it must have a Coast Guard certificate of inspection posted in the same manner as the operator's license.

•Lifejackets. There must be a lifejacket for each person on board.

•Emergency procedures. If the boat carries more than six passengers, emergency procedures must be posted, as well as announced.

City council discusses November referendum bond issues at meeting

munity without recreation facilities, according to Balco.

Charter bonds can be used at the discretion of Council without the consent of the public. However, City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck said that the charter bonds are allocated in the capital budget to roads, schools and public safety. If applied to the center, "something else will have to give," he said.

Councilman Harold Heischberger made a similar proposal for the Courts building. However, his motion was to keep the courts building on the referendum, but to finance the building with charter bonds if the referendum failed.

"That's like saying to the people," said Councilwoman Barbara Henley, "we don't care what you want; we'll do it anyway."

After a number of motions and votes, the two items remained in the referendum.

Heischberger seconded Balco's motion on the Center, asking "How can we be sure (it will be approved in the referendum)?"

Assistant City Manager W. M. Block said that the charter bond money was pushed into areas the Council designated as appropriate, leaving those projects considered less essential for the charter bond approach.

After the defeat of the $122 million referendum last year, Council reassessed its bond approach. Traditionally, the necessary projects which were more certain to meet with voter approval had been placed on referenda, leaving those with a questionable fate to be financed with charter bonds or other revenues.

Council considering it a mandate of the people, decided instead to fund the essentials—schools, roads and public safety—with general revenues and allow the public to decide what other projects it wanted.

Schools and roads are referenda projects because the needs extend beyond the funds available elsewhere.

"Let's not cloud the two other items on the referendum (roads and schools)," said Councilman John Moss. He asked that the referendum not be changed at the last minute and moved to approve the center.

"His motion passed by a vote of 9-2 with Balco and Heischberger dissenting."

Court referendum

Councilman Robert Fentress asked that Council look for other alternatives for the courts building and moved that item be removed from the referendum.

Councilman John A. Baum, noting that two jail referendums have failed, seconded the motion. Moss made a substitute motion to approve the Courts in the package, seconded by Henley. The motion was approved by a vote of 6-5, but couldn't make it to the polls because a two-thirds vote of Council, eight votes, is needed. Voting against approval were Balco, Baum, Fentress, Heischberger and Councilman Reba McClanahan.

McClanahan said she would change her vote if it would do any good, and Baum said he would also.

Baum said that it would end up looking as though he and his colleagues voting against approval are opposed to the courts "and we're not."

Mayor Robert G. Jones expressed confidence that the people of Virginia Beach take enough pride in their institutions to vote for the issue.

Councilman John Perry moved to reconsider the vote, which passed by a vote of 9-2 with Fentress and Heischberger dissenting. Moss moved for approval, seconded by Perry. That's when Heischberger made his substitute motion to place the issue on the referendum but to finance the facility with charter bonds if the referendum failed.

Disagreeing with Henley's assessment of the motion, Heischberger said, "We're saying we'd like to have you vote for it."

Henley said that the Council's dissension would jeopardize the other issues.

Councilwoman Meyera Oberdorf pointed out that the whole package was studied in workshops and that Council had obligated itself to Balco to work toward having the Center approved. She said that Heischberger's motion was like "putting a gun to the referendum" and added that a "caveman approach" was not needed.

The motion failed by a vote of 8-3 with Heischberger, Fentress and Perry voting in favor.

The issue was approved for a referendum by a vote of 10-1 with Fentress dissenting.

Each of the projects will add a one-cent increase to the real estate tax rate. The tax rate is now 80 cents per $100 valuation.

The $32.31 million for schools will add 3.7 cents to the real estate tax rate. The Oceana Lakes School added .7 cents.

The $40 million in the road bond referendum, along with $30 million in road construction over the next ten years on a pay-as-you-go basis, translates into another five-cent increase in the tax rate.

Oceana Master Chief Ervin retires

The retirement ceremony of command master chief Lawrence "L. None" Ervin resembled an Evin family reunion as much as a naval ceremony.

A chartered bus brought family members and friends from North Carolina to attend the ceremony. Approximately 200 guests attended the ceremony.

Ervin's career, which spanned

30 years, kept him at Naval Air Station Oceana for almost 20 of those years. He served on the station and on fleet squadrons deploying on aircraft carriers.

At his ceremony, Captain John Allen, the commanding officer of NAS Oceana, quoted the late president John F. Kennedy, "Ask any man of this century what he did to make his life worthwhile, I think he can respond with a great deal of pride and satisfaction, I served in the United States Navy."

Allen added, "Master Chief Ervin served and made his life worthwhile, but more importantly he has made his shipmates' lives worthwhile. For all of us that have been fortunate enough to serve with him, and had his life touch ours, we are better for it. Today is a fitting finale. Master Chief, son, husband, father, grandfather, sailor, jet mechanic, fellow boxing fan, friend and last, but not least, shipmate."

Ervin addressed those in attendance noting first the guidance of his parents, the support of his wife, Alice Faye, and his pride in their sons.

"My fellow chief petty officers, remember that old traditional household phrase, 'ask the chief.'"

Ervin said, "You are that physical bridge between the officers and the troops. I will go forward with the peace of mind knowing that you will keep the bridge strong, ever keeping the ship on a steady course."

Allen presented Ervin a Gold Star in lieu of this third Navy Commendation Medal.

Long distance phone rates drop

Continental Telephone Company of Virginia customers in Virginia Beach may see another reduction in their long distance rates beginning in 1987, according to Mike Hall, manager of telephone services in Virginia Beach.

This most recent reduction is fueled by a Federal Communications Commission order which cuts $1.2 billion from the maximum profits that AT&T and local phone companies can earn on long distance services in the next two years. Long distance rates have already fallen about 22 percent since the breakup of the Bell System in 1984.

Contel of Virginia, as a local company, provides the connection which allows long distance calls to be initiated and completed, according to Hall. "We use long distance revenue to subsidize local service which is priced below actual cost," he said.

As the result of the cut, Contel will be charging the long distance companies less for the long distance connection, and will have less with which to cushion the high cost of providing local service, Hall said.

Although FCC officials report that the latest cut will represent about a five percent reduction in long distance rates, AT&T officials said that the lower profit margin would not necessarily mean an immediate rate reduction, because of factors such as labor cost increases and possible tax law changes.

Public works issues guidelines on handling refuse from hurricane

Virginia Beach residents left with an increased amount of fallen limbs, leaves and other debris on their property after Hurricane Charley are advised to follow guidelines from the city's Public Works Department.

Put any loose debris such as pine straw and leaves in plastic bags and place them near the curb, making sure that they will not fall into the street. Refuse collection crews will pick up a maximum of 25 such bags per home each collection day.

Stack large, bulky items, such as tree limbs, in stacks no more than four feet deep and four feet wide. Collection crews will remove one stack per household each collection day.

If residents have a substantial amount of tree trimmings and debris, they can call Public Works at 427-4201 to sign up for one of the department's open-bed trailers.

A trailer will be brought to your home or neighborhood and left for 24 hours, then picked up for removal by public works free of charge.

Public works anticipates that all debris which is set out according to regulations will be picked up on regular collection dates by Friday, August 29.

Call Public Works at 427-4201.
